

A QUARANTINED QUARREL

Showing That Love, Not Dishes or Diseases of a Cook, Causes a Quarrel.

By ELEANOR POTTS
Author of "Pillars of the Port"

"This city is a hotbed of quarrels," said the old man, leaning back in his chair and puffing at a long pipe. "I have seen more quarrels here than I have seen in any other city. It is a city of quarrels, and it is a city of quarrels."

"What do you mean by that?" asked the young man, looking at him with a questioning glance.

"I mean that there is a quarrel in every house, in every street, in every shop, in every office, in every church, in every school, in every hospital, in every prison, in every court, in every city, in every country, in every world," said the old man, with a shrug of his shoulders.

"But why is that?" asked the young man.

"Because there is a quarrel in every heart," said the old man, with a smile.

"But why is there a quarrel in every heart?" asked the young man.

"Because there is a quarrel in every soul," said the old man, with a sigh.

"But why is there a quarrel in every soul?" asked the young man.

"Because there is a quarrel in every God," said the old man, with a look of heavenliness.
