FEEDING CATTLE IS GOOD PLAN FOR MARKETING VARIOUS CROPS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Although corn belt cattle feeders have lost money the last two years, yet on the average for five years or more the industry has been profitable on many farms and is a line of production which will contribute to be an important branch of American agriculture.

The bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, has recently issued Farmers' Bulletin No. 1277, Beef Production in the Corn Belt, which contains valuable suggestions to those who feel keen on the economical production of beef.

The investigations on which the bulletin is based were conducted by the department on 900 farms of the corn belt and every phase of the problem, from raising calves or buying feeders to the marketing of the finished steer, is treated in considerable detail.

and produce more cultivated crops caused a decline in beef raising, but the keeping of cows to raise calves has continued to be profitable on land too much run down for the best results for cultivation. The reduction of pasture has been compensated in part by clover aftermath, and by the greater clover, alfalfa and grass seed crops grown. Since 1905 there has been a decline in the number of cattle on farms but due to the increased acreage for dry farming and irrigation.

The investigation, which was carried on for three years, showed that the feed cost of keeping a cow a year was $60 per cent of the total cost of maintenance for a year while 21 per cent was the cost of labor, 10 per cent pasture and bothcosts. The total average cost of keeping a cow a year was $72.50. The average of 25 to the feed cost. The average of 25 to the feed cost. The average of 25 to the feed cost
