This is different. Quite likely it is better for a few to exhibit a lot of self-control to refuse to eat to be rewarded with a prize.

And so it is; the two men are drawn between the pleasant, but harmful; and the pleasant, but harmless. The Christian is saved by God and he knows it. He knows exactly into this portion of Scripture, he has found peace and joy and all the elaborate banquets and accepted the banquet and found it to be unsatisfying to the cross.

There are two dietitian upon which one may feed besides those which are pleasant to the appetite and that is the dainties of apparel, dainties of literature, dainties of music, dainties of language, dainties of apparel, dainties of entertainment, dainties of society.

The Restitution Flower.

In Egypt is a plant called the resurrection flower. It is seen as a little dry ball, and if put in water it opens and grows into a beautiful flower. Spring is near. Spring, but not flood, the flowers are aroused by being restored to water, and then supported in an upright position. Soon the flower is in full bloom. Slowly they unfold, and with petals flowers burst. It becomes a beautiful starry flower, not unlike an aster.—Brunaire Sagle.

PROPAGANDA BY PARADING FAILS

HOSTS CARRYING BANNERS IN WASHINGTON DOWN' ADD ON PLIGHTTHEIR AIMS.

BARRED FROM WHITE HOUSE

Latest Gang of Marchers Sought Re-lease of Those Who Tried to Picket United States Capitol During the War—Pacifist Women Silent.

By EDWARD E. CLARK

Washington.—General Coxey's army, which marched over the Potomac river from Ohio and descended on the capital in 1894, was the first of the "parades" on the programme of all those who come here to attempt to influence the policies of the government.

Washington is a battlefield today, and has been a battlefield for years. Every day, and sometimes several times a day, there is a procession of men, women and children has tried to march down Pennsylvania avenue, the main thoroughfare of the city, carrying banners in order to influence the President, the Congress, the Supreme court or the Cabinet. Sometimes the liberties of their country, sometimes it was in the interest of labor, sometimes it was in the interest of peace.

Sentimentality That Fails.

Practically nothing ever comes of these parades and demonstrations. Occasionally one of the banners which has appeared, after it has been carried for a few days, is found to be the subject of a resolution introduced in the senate or house, but it usually dies in committee. Then the civilian people have met the marchers on the streets and told them that there are things they are willing to do, but that they are not willing to do under duress. Then the marchers would prefer to do without because they were not accustomed to the greater worth than they all. Happy the man who has fallen into the hands of Lazarus at the gate is richer than the person who forces sympathy out of Lazarus has tomorrow stored away in the safety-deposit box of the bank of God, but for the man at whose gate he lies, tomorrow means everlasting bankruptcy.

The climax of a farce "went after the nations that were round about them, remember when the Lord had charged them that they should not do like them. (II Kings 17:15.) The Prophet Amos pictures them as a people who have become sensitive to their sins. They claimed these cheap and worthless things as their own, and from the same covenant and the unfaithfulness of their fathers. Having provided a way of escape for them they heard and thought the lusts of the flesh they were after the things, the sights and songs and deeds exemplified by the old testament in that neighborhood. We must guard against the same sinful tendency. Paul prays for our Lord Jesus Christ paid the entire debt and we receive His grace without money and without price, we must consider that the debt was paid and that we may faithly regard His will.

What if what we envy, the Christian is a pilgrim and a stranger on the earth, a pilgrim journeying home and a stranger on a sphere where his Lord was crucified. What is the difference between our living in the midst of luxuries and the poor and the neighborhood we live in a God-defying program in our souls.

Let us not be deceived. God is not fully cognizant of these things. Every Chinese philosopher knows that it is his window; every vender of all about China has seen. Yet there are few buildings which most pictures so faithfully portray.

In the usual print or photograph it is shown as exactly as in the old German wedding cake. In reality it is not nearly so attractive and mighty, and the builder seems into fragrance he comes to the scene.

There it stands on a vast platform, the base above the two-legs. Above the platform is a threefold marble terrace, each one smaller than the one below, green-gold frames, and three tiers of roofs, with upturned eaves, shadows and mystery under the eaves, and the whole set crying-colored as like those of the imperial palace, but deep, deep blue.

But it is just in this, its chief mission, that the temple is disappointing. In its insistence on the unexpected, has been overdone. The temple is in the midst of a huge park; acres of ground, covered with ancient trees, surround it; there are many ancient pavilion conducive to the meditative use of distance and vista; but the temple approaches are so clouded with gaudy, cheap, modern, and decadent gateways that nothing of the beauty of the trees and the avenues stumbles upon it through the last gate.

Another of the unexpected treasures of Peking is the dragon screen. It is barely mentioned in some of the guide books, and not mentioned at all by others. It is hidden behind a building in the west part of the city, and since only a few of the visitors to Peking ever see it, it is practically unknown to the average traveler.

It is a wall perhaps 20 feet high, and 30 feet long. And it is covered by with tile cut to represent nine dragons, each one a beautiful of various colors—yellow, purple, narwal orange—dazzling gold, and many hues, against a pale-blue sky.

Dynasties, one should not speak of "life-size" dragons; but these dragons are more than life-size, and dragons one may ever hope to see. They give rise to the feeling that if a dragon lived he would be exactly as one of these.

Famous Monument Moves

The Washington monument, solid as it is, cannot resist the heat of the sun poured on its southern side on a midsummer day without a slight bending of the gigantic shaft. This is prevented by means of a copper wire, 174 feet long, hanging in the monument structure, and carrying a plumb bob suspended in a vessel of water. As soon as it appears that the apex of the monument, 550 feet above the ground, is shifted by expansion of the stone a few hundredths of an inch toward the north. High winds cause perceptible motions of the pinnacle, and in still weather delicate vibrations of the crust of the earth, otherwise unperceived, are registered by it.

SURPRISES in PEKING

The Carts of Peking.

Unexpected in Architecture.

Indeed, the unexpected is the essence of Chinese architecture. One does not get a complete view of a temple or a yamen unless there be some elevation from which one can look down with from to view it.

A wall around the royal palace and the entrance are seen, and when one has passed one sees only the wall from which to view it.

In the level ground only the roofs and the entrance are seen, and when one has passed one sees only the roofs.

Even in the cities with the walls of Peking he expects to find, as in other Chinese cities, the hammered signs of shopkeepers throwing gay canopies across narrow, torturous, huddled streets; but behold! broad avenues three miles long, and shops on one or more decorative than the last, each breaking down the beholder with a fresh surprise.

This is especially true of the imperial palace, which is perhaps the most effectively arranged group of buildings in all China. Chinese cities, as a rule, are not planned. Each one grows as it will, as it may be seven courtyards, each one a little smaller than each with a central building through which one passes to the court beyond, each building larger, higher,
