CAN NOW WALK
AS WELL AS EVER

Extended Lincoln Resident Declares Tanlac Has Made a Clean Sweep of Her Rheumatism and Other Troubles.

"I couldn't believe all their self styled Tanlac merit I tried it myself and now I never doubt what I read about it," said Mrs. Anna B. Crawford, 2306 N. 22nd St., Lincoln, Neb., wife of a well-known Lincoln mail carrier.

"I got into a badly crippled condition from rheumatism and suffered greatly from indigestion. I had tried a lot of remedies at a time, slept poorly and woke up nervous and weak and my sight I could hardly get up. Then Tanlac was put in and my whole outlook changed. I soon got my appetite and could eat anything I wanted to. My nerves became as strong as anybody's, my sight cleared up and I can now walk as well as ever. I feel like a new woman and I'm glad to recommend Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

Harriet had not dared to hope that they would accept the situation so quickly, or that the world would, therefore were curious on the subject every afternoon, there were pleasant conversations with Mrs. Carter, and there were a few people to be invited to dinner. Harriet had for months been busy for some weeks talking, and the dinner parties and luncheons to the new Mrs. Carter it was generally felt, must wait until season.

To glance at the gold ring on her finger made Harriet feel as if a hapless almost shameful was fated to wive. Her new position, modestly as she filled it, was yet a high position. She had undertaken a grueling afternoon and wrist, if he did not. She could not fail.

"But when are you and Dick Carter going overseas?" Kim set her Mary Pickford mold, one afternoon, at tea. Madame Lanier, whose Victorian ideal of romance was not at all assimilated with the idea of the employer marrying his daughter's beautiful governess, smiled delightedly.

"They're very odd lovers, my dear," she said to Kim, with an exquisite glance. Mary laughed, and looked at Harriet, who, with a vivid blush of embarrassment, shook her head in protest. The others, with the exception of Kim, censured the little brick.

"Whenever they go, I suppose, they're going to time with me," she said, patting Harriet's hand with real affection and understanding. But Mary was free to see, under the bright eyes of a contented woman, freed from her own responsibility of others. "And Harriet's not in certainly mad about Richard," she finished.

But with the rest of the world she had to confess that there was nothing in the affair that she did not understand.

When everyone else had gone from the terrace, and the late afternoon light was throwing clear shadows across the tennis court bricks, Nina and Ida Tabor remained, talking. "And now we positively must go in, Nina," Ida said. "We've wasted this whole afternoon! I have to get packed if I'm going to the Jays'!"

"But you're not going to the Jays'!" Nina said in soft, sweet, confident remonstrance.

"But I must, darling!"

"Do you mustn't!"

"But, dearest, I truly have to—"

"But, Ladybird," Nina laughed happily, "I sent them a message this afternoon that you were staying with me! So now," she finished triumphantly, "that's settled! And we'll go to bed early, with books, and talk, and maybe even play at solitaire, and tell me all about eleven, as we did that other night—"

"Nina," Mrs. Tabor said, in a new tone, interrupting, "you didn't tell explosive Mrs. Jay, did you?"

"Indeed I did!"

"Well, then, you were extremely impertinent! And you've hurt my self-esteem, that Nina hardly recognized.

Responsibility now, but then under these circumstances would she, Harriet, have been willing to leave Nina and Ida together? Would she, Harriet, have left Nina to Ida's influence? She would not have been the second wife, she would have held her present position of trust and responsibility.

While Nina and her lover motored into the terrace Harriet brushed all these things, and after dinner that evening she gave Richard so clearly a warning that he sent at once for Nina, and with a clouded brow and anxiety eyes lavishly requested Harriet to be present while he spoke to her.

Nina came at once, with an inner cool expression on her rather heavy face. She seated herself near Harriet, and her father went to the point at once.

"Nina," he said, seriously, "you are my only Blondin this afternoon, Ida tells you?" And as Nina answered only with an ugly glance at Harriet, the lawyer, he added, "Didn't I ask you never to see him any more, seven months ago?"

"Yes, you did," Nina said, in a low tone, and with a bearing brave, "but I hope, dear, that you will not worry some day," she added, with a little air of pleading meant to make a wise choice. And until you are a Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions Condemns Action of Allies in the Near East.

Dr. Motzer, Iowa.—The Woodrow Wilson administration, the Democratic party, the American people, Mexico, foreign missionaries, relatives, the non-combatants, everywhere in India, and the Near East question were touched upon in the report of the Presbyterian board of foreign missions which was presented here to the general assembly, which began sessions today.

The allies were censured for permitting, by apathy, opportunism and timidity, the Turks practically to dictate terms to the Near East. "The United States, director of the allies," the report declared, "could have prevented the Armenian massacre and the scourging of the Turk, seems to be shocking because of inaction. Nor can the United States escape responsibility. The plan that she must avoid entangling alliances does not warrant her refusal to insist on fair play when a helpless sister nation is being attacked, robbed and thrown out to die.

The Wood-Forbes report was declared, despite "its recommendation of making banks slowly, a tribute to the good sense, the desire for knowledge and the patriotism of the Filipino people." Independence was declared the four-power treaty would help solve "one of the larger difficulties that confront the Philippine program, viz., the danger of aggression by other nations."

QUEEN O' THE MAY

Nina, with a little fine fully in the elder woman. Ronald Carter, in his experience, would be a flower for the home he had written her. Harriet, sighed, and resumed her interrupted task. Ronald's mother was to suggest a new thought to Nina, to make her more eager to please the old girl's host spirit.

Nina was the only seventeen. No, no," Harriet said, "the age when, long ago, she had been married to Richard Carter, Jr., was not Nina's age. She had not interested in college, as that ought to have been, and she had not been of course, after that. But Nina had the unspeakable charm of ignorance and girlhood. You're bound to have other girls, Richard," she had said, "and you'll be in such a case, and I think we ought to be prepared for it."

"Nonsense!" Nina said, proudly by Ida Harriet smiled.

"Well, I hope so, too. You wouldn't be a real true woman if you weren't!" she had said, with a little sigh. "And I'll tell him what you've said."

"You're talking like a woman of the world, Harriet," Richard had said, with a little laugh, "and I'm not that at all, approvingly. "When are you going to tell him?"

"As a coming over especially to see him," Harriet had said, "I think I'll suppose I might as well go down," she said, rising, "and tell Richard to go to luncheon, Nina, still such a child!"

Richard had kissed her and Richard for encouragement; he walked eagerly, toward the door.

"Marriage is a tremendous thing, Harriet," he said, with a sudden gravity.

"If you're going to say 'but,' Richard," Harriet said, "you don't deserve a father for love."

"I was going to say nothing but that standing and respect," Harriet had said, "I was going to say that I am the happiest man in the world, and that I hope for Nina's sake, and you do not understand this, but you are very young, Harriet, and that the most most it.

"Nina's very young," Harriet had said, and sat down, and regarded him with a long, thoughtful look. Unexpectedly, here between the fam- ily and the world, she had met him, on a June evening, a stray in his early manhood, and had loved him, and who was of absolutely no significance in their lives. And yet Harriet had been

To Knife that ornately furnished room of the home of Mrs. Richard Carter. Now, she gazed in awe at a noble Richard's wife, and Richard's mother, lovely little lady, in a gown of black and white, with priceless rubies in her ears, and a ruby ring on her finger, the rich colorful canopy that Kitty Richard Carter, Jr., had left her.

She caught a warning glance from Richard Carter, Jr., his father, and then alone Kittie broached the subject.

The girl of the picture had been Richard's sweetheart before the war, but like the mention of that "once" She was a woman of the world, and Nina, either—there was such surrender to her husband.

Just then Grant returned to announce that our waiting to Miss Kittie home.

Miss Clarice kissed her warmly and whispered: "I have planned it all, dear, to my place—because I therefore your young playmates, you know, and you must meet them as soon as possible."

Kittie's little heart leaped joyously, and as soon that meeting of proud relatives of a faithful uptown musician was accomplished, to say the least, an entering her daughter's household, to confront a grotesque three figure in faded gingham and fluttering paper sunbonnet.

"Who won't you entertain next, Ellie Kittie?" she entertained weakly.

"Why, mother, I am not 'doing the entertaining' this evening—Nevery replied her daughter. "Kitty has come to see me by Mary Terry."

It was Kittie who proposed that they crown Miss Elizabeth Queen of the May. "All the clowns of the young merrymakers the ceremony was performed.

Watching Dora after Grant noted the graceful grace with which Elizabeth Carter bore the homage of her diminutive subjects. He waited until Elizabeth's youngest child was crowned on the grasshouses, then, with quick, nervous movements, rolled the lawn.

"May I claim the day's privilege and be the first to pay my homage, Queen Elizabeth?"

Elizabeth's gray eyes did not waver before his resentful gaze.

"Why, Mr. Grant, you remember—as I So—that other May day—when you were a little boy—you crowned you their Queen? It was I who was the first to pay homage to you, dear. A note of bitterness had come into her voice. "And now you have come back to me—industrial life of a great city—while I remained there in the old home and grower; dreaming of a life that never came to me, and of a husband who never came."

Then, one dark day your father of the mistaken the poor dreamer's every sky and until recently I have been in constant sumption in the light of your social success. Then, one day, I read a little item on the steamer—a gorgeous bottle of medicine that was to cure all ills, and add them to the cooked potatoes. Up- heart seemed to die within me. Nevertheless, I purchased a bottle, and two-thirds of salt and pepper, and the with half a hard-boiled egg chopped fine.

"Ah, boy, dear, in your wounded pride you were quick to think that I had forgotten you and besides—the same little girl who had been the simple grandeur that other May day—"

A few minutes later Kittie marched past them at the head of her flower bedecked playmates. The little maiden's face was as bright as the sun that had achieved her hearts' desire. In her dainty fingers she held aloft the light that made the picture in Mr. Grant's sketch pad "dream of life" perfect happiness.

NATIVE BELIEVED IN SENTIMENT

Father of Dead Maori Youth Found Contentment in Remembering Really Beautiful Contention.

A pathetic story of a Maori father and his dead son is told by Mr. Hoi Hoi Tiro, who was born and grew up among the Maoris, in New Zealand.

When I went riding, Koru, who did not speak English, would always ride a pony that he called Pirihi, and he would sing a song which I learned to understand was a love song. Instead of disliking me for this, he seemed to like me the more, and with a beaming brown face would say, "Me," or "Hoi," as he was called on by my first name.

Then I went sojourning in the South seas, during an absence from New Zealand, a letter from my sister informed me of Koru's death. He had contracted smallpox. In replying I referred to Matariki's contention that the dead are never strongly dead so long as the living remember them. In simple words my sister told the part of my letter to Ben, the father of the dead boy, and received from him a most impress him deeply. In her next letter she told me this:

"Ben said to me, 'Koru is dead, but he is not dead. He is with the spirits of his people, instead of dishing up the old story of the resurrection, says a fashion writer. STYLES IN EVENING CLOTHES

Draped Crepes, Taffetas, Chiffons, Organdies, Available.

Colorful Gowns the Last Word in Summer Attire for Formal Affairs.

There are a number of manner in which the evening dress can be developed, and the fact that it is the crepe of the top coat so it is of the evening dress—crepe predominates, as the expression without so much a trying, requires a fashion writer in the New York Times. There are the plain, draped crepes that suit certain figures and there are the beautiful taffetas which are designed to grace those figures which are more girlish and a little more slim and straight. There are the organdies, too, which make the newer sort of evening clothes when they are properly gotten together, and, in fact, there is no end to the person who loves to look graceful and filmy and charming in the clothes which she selects to wear for parties and the various affairs of the kind.

There is one point that is particularly noticeable in the evening clothes of the summer—that is that they are full, and that they are not falling else in the world but, first of all, they are brittle in color. And it is the surprising to see women and girls who, heretofore, appeared to be quite emphatically that they could wear nothing but somewhat sombre colors, more that they considered those the only good ones, suddenly blossom forth in the most brilliant shades imaginable.

Taffetas are the materials which, above all others, are suited to the height of fashion. And some of these skirts are so soft in texture that they look almost like crepes. However, certain it is that the taffetas which are particularly adaptable to certain purposes. There are those that the younger woman and the thin woman make their evening dresses of, and the make her evening dress of, and the heavier taffetas they are, in fact, the most appropriate for the accompaniment of the woman who, in spirit, is always stout.

The chiffon dresses are particularly good for stout women, as they are made full and graceful and, above all, they are graceful. They have that flimsy appearance that is so becoming to the expression and becoming to the figure, and they are the ideal combination for the erection of Lady- like effects.

SOLTACHE BRAID ON DRESSES

Into-vating Revival Noticed in Use of Decoration; Favorite With Parisiennes.

There has been a most interesting revival of the use of soltache braids on the dresses of the season's frocks, and the vogue is increasing day by day. There is now after row of braid wound upon the ends of chiffon sleeves, so that, while they give an extremely transparent effect, they have at the same time that necessary heaviness which adds the finishing touch to the correct fit particula portion of style.

Soltache braid is used on chiffon sleeves of the same color, and then the same braid is wound in black on the ends of the sleeves. Braid up in dark green was added to a lighter green frec., and the black finishing on dark blue is something that is as good this season as it was last season, during which other seasons in the past.

The French designers are using this style braid to make allover embroidered designs on the fronts of the dresses of the season. Soltache braid is also used to outline the edges of the dresses and is covered with braiding of this sort.

Vivid-Hued Costumes.

Parasols, hats and work bags of resemble to match the vivid-hued summer costumes are also correct and certainly not excessive to make.

ADORNS THE SEPARATE SKIRTS

Self-Fringe One of Season's Most Popular Trimmings; Fabric Is Unimportant.

Whether the material is of cotton, wool, or silk, so long as it is a loosely woven weave the self-fringe trimming is one of the season's most popular devices for embellishing skirts. It is cleverly revealed in the self-fringe as the material is cut, the fringe is overcast or knotted, and the edge is covered or not, as the fancy dictates.

Self-fringe borrows this trimming most effectively, has three tunics or plaits fringed, and the rest of the skirt is plain. It was shown in a coarse mesh, cotton fabric, and in the pockets being finished with little self fabric straps caught in the center with a metal filigree buckle.

With this skirt was worn an interesting sweater, knitted on Tuxedo lines, but without the usual revers and collar. The sweater was in brown wool, with knitted in polka dots of tan finishing in front. The sleeves had ribbed cuffs.

Vivid colors are playing an important part in the new separate skirts many are entirely in one bright shade, such as jade or green or magenta, or spark red; orange or medium yellow, while others have many are in a bright color with a plaid or striped design. The tailoring precedence over the pleated skirts, although these are seen to be a vigorous leading to all while, a vast number of the plaited skirts are shown with tailored waistbands and tailored finish.

CHIC DRESSES MADE OF HEAVY SILK

Many Garments of This Popular Fabric for Autumn Wear Native to Beautiful.

There are numberless dresses for the street wear made of heavy silk and of the cotton rather than the silk, which has reached such a stage of perfection, says a fashion writer. This latter material comes in all the pretty colors and coloring and when the gowns are made in the latest cut and attention to the rules of the three-piece costume will be strictly observed. In present time spun silk, then they be- come creations that are lovely to look in town with the wraps to go with them or out of town in the limousine, auto state, and not accompanied by the wraps.

Then only give honor and glory to the sport costume, for it has come to serve as many purposes in a woman's life. It is something wh - suits the most efficient and the plainest on presentable of her life, and she has every person to relate, as she does, to

CHINTZ OR DRAPERY STYLES

Wash Goods Counter Affords Materials That May Be Combined With Plain Colored Fabrics.

Fisterns and colors of the nature of chints are steadily gaining in favor and will be worn a great deal this season as a summer novelty. Manufacturers have taken advantage of this fact and have put on the market a number of very pretty designs for garden and for spring wear with fair success, says Dry Goods Economist. And to a large way, young women, especially those who aim to be distinctive in dress, buy chints or drapery styles at the wash goods counter and combine them with such separates fabrics as silks, velvets, satins and the like, and have their dressmaker make simple coops for the building up of dresses which are unique.

SINGIN' o' June, when the roses
Jump a-bed, an' the sun hang low;
Whistlin' away
Through th' livening drive
Singin' an' whistlin' a merry tune
To the music an' mirth of them all—

Catchin' the gleam of the bright blue sky;

Hearin' the sound

Her songs to the rarest of sweetness—
That's June.

Off through th' meadows real an' sweet,

Dreamin' dreamin
Of the pretty stream,
Where th' lilies nestle in their cooling bed
To the restful, fairest month—can't

WHO WANTS TO KNOW

IF YOU are sincere in your desire to know how to achieve, how to make yourself worthy of the highest confidence and then become competent to hold a place above the ordinary, you will now be time in acquiring the necessary knowledge.

You will not waste a single hour in idleness or unproductive effort, nor will you spend a penny unjustifiably.

You will go to your task seriously and with unbounded confidence in it.

In your pursuit, which is a little while will have become an alluring, big pleasure, you will discover that you have developed a power of mind, comprehending the prominent places id in the beginning of their careers just as you are doing.

They considered no time in the foolish chase of rainbows, e ming and the companionship of all counsellors and the perusal in their spare hours of the literature of the leading truths and principles upon which they had built a substantial foundation for the erection of t ader life.

They treated the chaff to the winds and stored with utmost prudence the golden grain.

The greatest men of today, the men who have become leaders in the arts and the crafts, struggled hard in their years to get a foundation upon which they built. They knew what they were about. They were not content with high purpose or cherished their purpose. Though they often grew weary, they held to it and fought.

Their experiences with the world gave them knowledge of men and affairs with a fullness impossible otherwise.

Their present wealth, power and influence are the result of the thought and lesson, who sweetingly talk among themselves of "luck" and "chance" and misnomers for work and plunk.

Being earnest is a tips distinction.

And this is especially true when it comes to the matter of dress. Success is based on the admitted ignorance and neglect of men and women who never distinction but invariably lack the courage to take a glance in the glass and bear the brunt of battle.

Dress is a fearful and wonderful thing to know, who are brushing side ob- stacles in the path of success, who have brought their spirit and faith without which no man can make headway.

SCIENCE ON FARM

Agriculturist of Today Must Know Business Thoroughly.

Canadian Tillers of the Soil Have Proved That Old Days of Haphazard Methods Have Gone.

Agriculture in Canada has the status of a profession which tells its high standard of operation and the prize place it occupies in national life posi- tr. The days when land was constantly tled on and farmed without any intelligent understanding of agricultural processes are going with the dwindling of the prairie sod, and in their place are coming the days of the intensive cultivation of soil science, and the abandonment of prices which have been rendered unproductive. Cleaner and cleaner, and less fastener for realization that farming is a specialized profession requiring special training, and in the place of this spoliation there is an intelligent system of crop rotation, preservation of the virtue of the land, a discovery of the nobility of the farmer's calling and a determination to secure and achieve the best possible in everything.

The Education of the Farmer.

Agricultural colleges, experimental farms and demonstrations farmings propaganda, all in an appreciation of the national importance, have contributed to the education of the farmer, especially the younger race, especially discovers the futility of the old haphazard methods, and sees in it only of compartively recent years that farming in Canada has become the most remunerative and sensative study it is and its tenets are now followed by hundreds of farmers who have followed haphazard methods for generations and who around are gradually forced from necessity to adopt the intensive system and application of their profession.

The young farmer of today who has an ambition to leave his old life for the greater freedom of the western land, take a farm for himself, and, the free of debt, in a few years, is the man who for ballots. He has the knowledge of the principles of his work seriously and intelligently applied, and he has upon a following out of the systems of experimental and practical agricultures, and utilize the results of the expert investigation and research the Dominion places at his disposal. The days of the pioneer is passed, and the novice has almost an equal opportunity with the farmer of a life- time.

A census of Canadian farmers would probably show that fully one-half are from the cities and towns, and have brought up to the life of the farm. Yet none would care to go back to farming on the score of poor farming methods or poor agricultural returns. The progress with intensive cultivation and the development of better breeds of live stock and more efficient tu'ls, too, that practically all farmers now have attained that most signal honors at International Live Stock Exhibitions and the most lifelong farmers, but city men who, tired of the life of the metropolis, recently without the remotest previous knowledge of agricultural activities have through intelligent study and some application of the best farming methods surpassed the efforts of those born and bred to the business. Finding things on the farm in the way of opportunity for the man who knows how to grasp them.
