Second National Conference on State Parks

Bear Mountain Inn, Palisades Interstate Park, May 22-25, 1922

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

The Second National Conference on State Parks will be held May 22-25 at Bear Mountain inn, Palisades Interstate park, on the west bank of the Hudson river about 45 miles above New York City. The first conference, held January 30-31, 1921, in Des Moines, Ia., appointed John Barton Payne, then secretary of the interior and now chairman of the central committee, American National Red Cross, chairman of a committee on arrangements for a second conference to be held in 1922. The committee membership includes:

Edgar B. Harlen, Des Moines, secretary of Iowa State Board of Conservation.

Mrs. Frederick Schoff, Bryn Mawr, Colo., chairman department of applied education, General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Richard Lieber, Indianapolis, State of Indiana Department of Conservation.

J. Horace McFarland, Harrisburg, Pa., president American Civic association.

W. L. Harding, Des Moines, former governor of Iowa.

Mal W. A. Welch, Havenstraw, N. Y., general manager and chief engineer Palisades Interstate park.

James Grafton Rogers, Denver, Colo.

William F. Bade, Berkeley, Calif., president Sierra club, California Associated Societies for the Conservation of Wild Life, vice-president American Alpine club, Save the Redwoods league and Sierra Club.

Chairman Payne's letter of announcement of the time and place of meeting says:

"A great deal of constructive work has been done during the past year in the establishment of standards by the states of the several states, and the enlarged holdings and areas created. The convention this year will be particularly illuminating, as it will give the delegates an opportunity of seeing the development of the Palisades Interstate park, which stands in the forefront of state parks. While the first and third days will be taken up with business sessions, the second will be devoted to a trip to West Point and a new state highway around Storm King overlooking the Hudson, while the fourth day will be given over to an inspection of the Bronx parkway and will mean an especially interesting motor trip from the Bear Mountain inn down the Hudson to Lake Kitchawan and then down the Bronx River parkway to the New York Zoological gardens in the Bronx.

"I especially urge that all organizations interested in the preservation of our native scenery arrange to have delegates attend the conference. Many states have taken the forward step in the development of a state park system, and a number have created a state park board, but in the majority of the states, even the more progressive ones, the park movement of the states and the organization of a state park system, should start from Maine to California will become an actual fact in the very near future."

The first conference was held in Des Moines because Iowa has a state park law that some pretty near being a model. The state board of conservation has power to acquire lands for parks, and make them accessible and has funds with which to work. It is non-partisan and membership is an honor. The state has already acquired several parks and is steadily adding more areas.

The second conference is held in Palisades Interstate park because it is the finest object lesson in the world of efficient state park management on a large scale and of the benefits to the public of such a preservation plan. There is no better park for a detailed description. These points, however, stand out:

The park along the historic Hudson had its origin in the movement to save the Palisades from the encroachments of railroads. Col. William Nelson Cromwell, a veteran of the Civil war, and several wounded in battle.
