SWIFT'S PRODUCE REVIEW

While receipts of fresh eggs continue on quite a liberal scale, interest of the trade centers largely in the situation on storage eggs. On September 1, the statistical situation indicated an excess of over 200,000 cases. The October 1st report, mentioned above, shows an excess of 750,000 cases.

Consumption of eggs will have to continue on a much more liberal scale in order that there may be a fair reduction in the storage holdings. Prices are now below the cost of eggs in storage, plus carrying charges. An increased use of eggs, both fresh and storage will prove helpful. The degree of price advance will clean up the lay," correctly expresses the situation.

An increase in the movement of new poultry is noted in the northern states, Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas, and parts of Nebraska, which have only heretofore been moving a lot of poultry, are now beginning to market their large poultry crop. The larger market supplies in the larger cities in the country for live poultry has caused some adjustment in the paying prices.

TWO FACTS

THERE are just Two Facts which we wish to impress indelibly upon the mind of the Clothing buyer, that is fortunate enough to be reading this article now.

FACT ONE

WHEN we buy our Clothing, Hats and Furnishings, we make it our particular business to secure the best of everything that can be procured.

We KNOW of nothing—we have not the Country's best Manufacturers—Makers who have a reputation for making the very best in their respective lines—and then we purchase, on orders made for our trade their best productions.

FACT TWO

AFTER WE have secured the best, we then place a moderate and conservative price on every article—a live and let live price.

NOTHING that smacks of a fancy figure, but a price as low as our high standard of quality will allow, and then we back our quality and our price with a guarantee.

NOW

IN VIEW of these facts, may we not have the pleasure of seeing you, when in need of any article in our line.

THE LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS

By Zane Grey

"There had been months of unrest, of curiously painful wonderment that her position, her wealth, her popularity no longer satisfied. She believed that she had lived through the course and fancies of a girl to become a woman of the world. And she had gone on as before, a part of the glittering show, but no longer blind to the truth—that there was nothing in her instinctive life to make it significant. And at last she knew what she needed—love. Love for a long hour, to close out on tawny, sunlit, darkening distances, to watch the stars, to race her soul, to find her real self.

Then it was she had first thought of Jim Lash. Not that he was the real man, but only that he was the first sentiment. As it happened, she had friends who were going to California, and she made a quick decision to go with them. When she calmly announced her intention of going out west her mother was entertained in consternation; and her father, surprised into pathetic memory of the black sheep of the family, had stared at her with glistening eyes. "Why, Madeline! This want to see Jim Lash! Why, girl, he's a—a—" But she was not to be dissuaded, and her mother was warned and cajoled and begged to keep her secret. Her brother forgot her haughty poise and dignity. Madeline stood her ground, even in reminding them that she was twenty-four and her own mistress. In the end she had prevailed.

Madeline had planned to arrive in El Cajon on October 3, her brother's birthday, and she had succeeded, though her arrival occurred at the twenty-second hour. Her train had been several hours late. Whether or not she was glad of the delay, the subsequent solitude, the slight quickening of her pulse as she neared the end of her trip, she had no knowledge of the event. Like all women, she had dreamed of this moment, and had neglected America. She had thought of it in connection with many men, but always it was Jim Lash who had been attracting her. Jim Lash, the boy who had gone out of her life when she was a girl of fifteen.

She had found that the setting of this chance directed Madeline's mind to the first time she had ever responded to the telegraph wires. Then she had been a girl, a fine young rider, a tall man entered, and with a word or two, a look or two, he had changed her so that the round came from his spell.

Then she had been a girl, a fine young rider, a tall man entered, and with a word or two, a look or two, he had changed her so that the round came from his spell.

"Who was that man?" he demanded.
