Diamonds of Malopo

by VICTOR ROUSSEAU

COPYRIGHT BY W. G. CHAPMAN

CHAPTER II.—Winton, en route to his mine, finds the town of Taungs wildly excited over a big strike at Malopo, including the 95-carat "De Witt diamond." Two coach passengers are a disreputable old prospector, Daddy Seaton, and his daughter Sheila. On the journey a passenger, who turns out to be De Witt himself, insults Sheila. Winton fights De Witt and knocks him out. Sheila tells him to turn back. She says that her father is a broken English army officer, who has killed a man and is therefore in De Witt's power, that De Witt is all-powerful, being backed by Judge Davis, president of the diamond syndicate and also the resident magistrate and judge of the native protectorate.

CHAPTER III.—Winton finds Malopo in a turmoil, both over the strike and the theft of the De Witt diamond. Winton foolishly discloses his identity to Sam Simpson, a Jamaican negro, subeditor of the local newspaper. He more wisely confides in Ned Burns, watchman at the Big Malopo, who tells him that the syndicate has planned to take control of the mine the next morning.

"If you knew, you would turn from me in loathing."

"Sheila, you are as good and true as any girl in the world."

"Oh, if he knew! If you could guess!"

"Dear, I love you. Let that suffice. I can make you love me—"

She shook her head with her unconquerable obstinacy. "Never," she answered.

"So that's De Witt's game," mused Winton. "He must be at the end of his tether if he can't fly higher than that," he reflected. Then aloud: "What did he do to you, Sam?"

"Sam, I believe Mr. Burns wants a night watchman," said Winton. "I'll take you to him."

"Well, we'll see what the Book has to say," grumbled Ned, taking out his Bible. He read:

"Two Kings, four, thirty-eight: 'And Elisha came again to Gilgal and there was a dearth in the land; and the sons of the prophets were sitting before him; and he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.'"

He closed the Book. "Well, I suppose it's all right then, Mr. Garrett," he said. "But if the Book hadn't said so I'd never have trusted him."

"Sam's all right," answered Winton. "But I'd be interested to know how you infer it from that passage."

"Why, Mr. Garrett, it's perfectly clear," answered Ned in surprise. "You're Elisha and I'm Gilgal, and you've come again to me. The dearth in the land is the problem about Sam. Sam's the great pot, and the pottage is the diamonds, and the sons of the prophets are the shareholders. Now the Book says the great pot is to be set on for the sons of the prophets."

POOR MR. SOUSA!

Composers, authors and playwrights appealed at a senate hearing for defeat of the Dill bill to release radio broadcasting stations from royalty imposed under the copyright laws. John Philip Sousa and Augustus Thomas were among those who voiced a protest against the measure.

"The Radio Corporation of America gets money, doesn't it?" queried Mr. Sousa in a brief exposition of his position. "If they get money out of my tunes, I want some of it. That's all."

He had a "secret" to tell the committee, Mr. Sousa continued, and that was the whole era of "mechanical music," by which he denominated phonographs as well as radio and other music rendering machines, had meant loss to composers.

"My royalties in the days when sheet music was all that was sold used to run to $60,000 a year," he added, "but they have never touched that figure since."

Six million customers and 125,000 orders in each day's mail is the record of the largest mail order house in the United States.
