Let's Get Together

That a Chamber of Commerce will serve the community more than essential benefit to its business men is attested by the list of enterprises functioning under the commercial organization among the many of which it is purposed to form the Carlisle club.

These are the committees:

Behind Taxation, water supply, telegraph office, trade promotion, industrial development, freight rates, recreational facilities, street improvement, good roads, community, sport, merchants' protective association, insurance, electric lights, improvement of telephone service, community advertising, municipal affairs, public service, miscellaneous.

The possibilities of improvement in the social, moral and the financial life of Carlisle, through the formation of a Chamber of Commerce, are unlimited. Mr. George Mosch, who has taken such kindly interest in our affairs, to perfect an organization said last Friday night, "If you try it for two years, you will never again be without it."

The Mercury urges in step everyone to attend the meeting Friday night, February 8, at the court house, beginning at 7 o'clock.

The Carlisle band has agreed to furnish the music and every indication points to an enthusiastic meeting.

Get imbued with the spirit of expectancy! Because we have never been able to organize a commercial club in Carlisle is no reason to think that it can't be done.

IN LOVING REMEMBRANCE

Of our dear father, A. G. Sloan, who departed this life Jan. 27, 1923.

Nearly one year has faded slowly,
Growing day by day more frail,
Suffering cruelly all his sufferings
Without murmur, moan or wail.
Loving father, true and kind,
No other like him on earth we find.
For all of us he done his best.
May God grant him eternal rest.
Lonely are our hearts today,
For the one we loved so dearly,
Has forever passed away.
More and more each day we miss him,
Friends may think the wound is healed,
But little they know the sorrow
That lies within our hearts unrevealed.
—Sadly missed by his children.

CHAPTER XXI

News of Stewart

Blindfolded, like a wild creature, Madeline Hazlewood ran to her room. It felt cool in the shade of lightning and shattered the shadowy substance of the room into a thousand splinters. The wonder of Jenny Mefford under the strange regard with which she had received her confession, and the astounding secret so revealed by Parker Morton—these were forgotten in the sudden consciousness of her own love. She theorized the Donald that lay had at the gates of her mind. With overering like volcanoes in her heart and exude shame!

"I offer my lo—love! It—I love him!"

In a nature like hers, where strength of feeling had long been inhibited as a matter of training, the force of the forming surprise as sudden consciousness of possession was overwhelming for its awakening, time for its searching and by that bold enlightenment the secret came, and Madeline Hazlewood knew that she loved Jim Link, but the thought of the man she hated Rudolph, as the rapist, something in her—this dauntless new personality of which Jenny Mefford had spoken to Gene Stewart. Her mind whirled about and hit the She saw him then, as brutal: she saw him abandoned. Lost in the wonder of this new love for him, this thing grew—one of a different name—work, work changed to shock, growing strong, strongly, quite finally silent, then, with a sense of acute, secretive, tireless, faithful self as a woman, hard as iron to endure, and at the last noble.

"Oh, that is splendid!" she cried, "I am his wife. His wife! That moment with him—the marriage—was the first gift his love, his rise, his silence, his self-effacement. He never believed in him. Could I be anything to him? Madeline Hazlewood! I am his wife, and I love him! His wife! I in the wife of a cowboy! Why, I am a cowboy. Can my love be endowed in, do I want anything else? I've got a gone. Gone! Could he have sensed—will not, dare not think of that. I will come back. No, he never will even ask it. He—he loves me! I do!"

And on the morning of the second day when Madeline went out upon the porch, dressed in her riding habit and with lunch, bandaged wood, handed them on Baldy's saddle, Jenny Mefford

"I Will Say It—Hear Hoof Love Him!"

the federal reserve. Sentenced to death Thursday at sunset."

CHAPTER XXII

The Ride.

"Phillie—!"

The old cattleman stood pale before her, staring at her white face, at her eyes of flame.

"Madeline! I am Stewart's wife!"

"My Gawd, Miss Majesty!" he burst out, "I knowed somethin' terrible was wrong. Aw, sure it's a pity—"

"Oh, don't think I'll be hard to shoot when I know him now, when I'm with him," she said, and her voice was like a knife. Stillwell, send for Link and the cars!"

She went into her office. Her mind worked with extraordinary rapidity and clearness. Her plan, born in one lightning flash of thought, necessitated the careful wording of telegrams to Washington, to New York, to San Antonio. Those were to senators, representatives, one high in public and private life, men who would remember her and who would serve her to their utmost. Never before had her position meant anything to her comparable with what it meant now. Never in all her life had she known the power that it was then. If she had been poor! A shuddering chill from the thought at its inception. She dispelled heartbreaking thoughts. She had power. She had wealth. She would set into operation all the unlimited means these gave her—the wires and pulleys and action underneath the surface of political and international life. She spun, free, powerful, alive as a spider, and presided in D. H. 15, pure 250, cash office.

For the purchase price the purchaser will be required to execute bond, said bond bearing 6 per cent interest from date of sale until paid, cause to have the force and effect of a replevin bond. Bidders will be required to comply promptly. This 26th day of January, 1924.

C. M. SWINFORD, M. C. N. C. C. Master Com.

"Can an Automobile Be Driven From Here to Northern Montana?"

Agra Priest?" she asked. Can an automobile be driven from here into northern Mexico?"

"Sure. But it'd take time."

"Time! I can do it in little time," she went on, in swift eagerness. "Otherwise how long would it take?"

"I'm only a—a cowboy, Miss Majesty. He allowed fairness. It was a singular change in him. "There's an awful lot to—down over the border. If by some luck I didn't smash the car I'd say—maybe a week. But I'm not as good after that ride—"

"I am Stewart's wife," she answered him, and she looked at him, not cruelly, not as any motive to persuade or allure, but just to let him know the measure of her dependence upon him.

He started violently—the old action of horse, the inscrutable mask of Manly Price. This man was of the West, primitive.

Then Madeline's words flowed in a torrent. "I go forward with him. I am his wife. I have spoken! Send for Link! Have him ready to start in an hour. Link, I have faith in you. I haven't hope—to say more. Stillwell, you know me
