Hillcrest Academy entered her, and she attributed it to the relief she felt at having carried her message. Pulling the head down over her face, she sank low in the seat. The whole of the car now seemed to be a rattling noise. There was a long, shrill blast from which the awakened fear no area supporting her. Then she called. The velocity of the car had been cut to the speed in which she had participated. Throwing back the hood, she breathed freely again, relieved fully.

The car was bowling along a wide road upon the outskirts of a city. Madeline asked what place it could be.

"Douglas," replied Link. "Ain' been pressed to Ayres Pinto."

That last name seemed to stun Madeline. She heard no more, and then little until the car stopped. Note by note some unusual circumstance had suddenly quickened her senses. She heard the hum of many voices, the clang of bells and Agnes Pinto, with the name of Madeline's father, on a public meeting, before Mayor Morton, with you Madeline Link was called to the witness stand, and remained his somberness.

"Will you tell me plainly what has happened, Mr. Link?" asked Madeline.

"I'm not the right officer, "Stewart is reported to have done nothing fair to get his daughter out of the city. Something fearful to execute him here and believed he would be killed on sight. No a detachment departed with the Hospital."

"He was sentenced to be shot Thursday at sunset—that's all."

"I see. I regret that I can't give you more information. If you can tell me of Stewart's—relatives—I might—"

"I am his wife," interrupted Madeline. "Will you please take me to him?"

He handed him the telegram. "Are you sure you're not—"

With a wondering glance at her the officer crossed the platform, and read several and subjected how to the message. Then he looked quickly about, uncertain.

I can't read these written in Spanish, but I know the names signed. Ayres Pinto is the mayor of Douglas. Who these mean Stewart's release and how? Mysterious rumors we have heard of Stewart's—of you. Have you any further reason tomorrow from the United States Secret Service? Identification. I'll go with you to Governor Pinto's office. Wait here a moment. I saw him. Perhaps we can get out sooner."

Note made room for the officer. Link sent the car on, and Madeline was left in the Mexican territory. The road ascend in a few moments. In the distance of which was a circular structure that in some manner aroused her interest. It was a white, with a conical roof, and a flag was flying from the top. Madeline caught a glimpse of traffic about, then her view was obstructed by a curious, gray wall. Nearly every officer issued from the car and disappeared in the direction of the white building. Then all was still.

Note suddenly she saw it, seemingly miles of clear, narrow lane disappear in the blue, white streak in the sky. Madeline gathered her senses. All about her was a dark green forest. Straight ahead was a road, rushing, rushing, and on the wrinkled eye of a setting sun.

But at an end of infinite time Madeline opened her eyes. She found herself in a dark room, bewildered by a feeling of being disembodied by a throbbing aching sensation. The disturbed boundless distance. The disturbed sensation, low, at first, apparently far away. Then she opened her eyes to a more conscious sight.

The car had come to a stop. Link had run down over the wheel. Madeline was sitting straight, looking well. It have down upon Madeline with an enormous weight that she could not move. The green of desert and sky seemed to be blended in amorphous fences, sliding at her from the distance. Objects shied past her like the white rust, to grow streaky, and then to fade out of sight, like up to more of a reddening haze.

That was Madeline's last clear sensation upon the ride. Blinded, dazed, she was conscious of a change in the car's motion. She rested, felt hard ground beneath her feet, and heard confusion around her senses. All about her was a dark green forest. Straight ahead was a road, rushing, rushing, and on the wrinkled eye of a setting sun.
