Overwhelming Majorities Not Easily Bamboozled.

The Courier-Journal avers that The Mercury has done that newspaper an injustice, by inferring from recent expressions in its editorial columns that all of us who favor submitting the bond issue plan to a vote of the people, favor "crooked elections." The Mercury most assuredly disclaims any intention to do the Courier-Journal an injustice. Our inference, we feel, was drawn, at least, and certainly we reached the conclusion, as stated in the editorial in question, without the least malice toward our Louisville neighbor. Our imperfection was a composite one, or the conclusion was from both the news columns and the editorial columns of the Courier-Journal and a cartoon appearing in the Louisville Times. We are glad that the Courier-Journal has seen fit to make its attitude clear to us in the matter and take pleasure in republishing in another column the editorial appearing in Monday's issue.

The gist of the whole thing one would conclude, after reading the Courier's editorial, is that our Louisville contemporary believes that the "machine politicians of both parties" will steal the election in favor of the bonds, while The Mercury doesn't believe that they will or can do it. Now, The Courier thinks that our admission that there have been crooked elections in Louisville is fatal to our argument, "What is possible in Louisville is not impossible in other parts of the State." It says. Indeed it is not impossible, but it is improbable. If Louisville may be taken as a criterion in the matter of conducting an election in Kentucky, may we not as reasonably take Nicholas county as a standard?

We believe that the sentiment in Nicholas is decidedly against the bond issue and we are wondering how the machine politicians would set about stealing the necessary votes in this county. We do not know the sentiments of our three election commissioners on the bond issue question. The chances are that they do not favor it. Be that as it may, when they meet to select election officers, party lines will be drawn, for we elect a President in November. And so it seems to The Mercury that their selections will be more than apt to present a fair average of those opposed and those favoring the bond plan, whatever the personal opinion of the commissioners may be to the matter. A case there can be no working within the polls and, granting the correctness of our opinion that the people of Nicholas county oppose the bond issue and admitting that their ballots will be cast and counted as cast, where are the "interlocking directorate" of machinesters going to "snitch" their votes? Of course, Nicholas is a small county, but it is, we think, an average county in Central Kentucky, in the matter of bond issue opinion.

The Courier-Journal would answer, one supposes, that by "manning certain strategic points and there they could readily count out any majority which the voters might roll up against them." We wish the Courier had been more specific about these "strategic points," but whenever they may be located, however well buttressed against attack they may be, we simply can't believe that they will be able to withstand the onslaught of a public opinion, which the Courier-Journal itself designates as an "overwhelming opposition of the people to the bonds."

Of the existence of crooked politicians and the people-be-damned game they play, The Mercury has, to some inkling, at least. We are not unaware of the professional politician's lack of scruples, nor are we blind to the tremendous power wielded by some of these gentry. It is an enthralling game they play, if not always a lucrative one, and they do fool and trick and count-out the people sometimes. But whenever, from lancing or interlocking, these prestidigitators of political chicanery are able to take a perfectly good "overwhelming opposition of the people" of a State to any question and batter it into a trickled and bamboozled minority, things have come to a pretty pass in this representative government of ours. When that day comes, The Mercury will be ready to put out the fire and call the dog.

"Keep Off The Grass" Laws.

Senator Hamilton's bill to regulate and control the sets, thoughts and conduct of the country of Kentucky goes into the category of "freak" bills, yet it is not difficult to understand the ironical frame of mind which prompted the Fayette Senator in the drafting of the "freak." A bill to prohibit the playing of golf on Sunday had just been introduced. Senator Hamilton may play golf and he may play the game on Sunday if he does, he knows that it is fine exercise, especially for those whose waist line is changing; and he knows that it is wholesome and good for mind and soul, as all out-of-doors exercise, in which one takes pleasure, is sure to be. Amusing oneself in the fresh air and sunlight brings one closer to an appreciation of the Maker of it all; it blows the musty cobwebs from one's brain and naturally one gets all "set up," when a holier-than-thou fellow man would make such harmless and wholesome pleasure illegal.

The Lexington Herald thinks that Senator Hamilton "is taking a dangerous chance in introducing such a bill," for, says the Herald, "it might be passed." The Herald, of course, speaks sarcastically, for the Fayette colonel's bill prohibits just about everything, from Santa Claus to a fishing worm, but the tendency to make prohibitory laws, which seems to be growing every year, might warrant the making of such a statement in all seriousness.

The Mercury does not refer to the Eighteenth Amendment, which seems to pop into everyone's mind, as soon as the subject of prohibition, is mentioned. It is the desire to regulate, control and prohibit the other fellow fellow's conduct, that which is objectionable to the author of the bill or some of his constituents that seems to have become a passion with legislators. The Herald quotes a writer in the New York World, who would have a whistling forbid. Another writer, in a Chicago paper, would have Mahlon Leary placed on the verboten list, a movement under way to prohibit the growing of tobacco. And so it goes.

The Mercury fears that the zeal of some would-be reformers of the world and their fellow men, according to their own ideas, begins to "wrester itself and fall on 'nother side."

The County Agent.

The Mercury wishes to urge the farmers of Nicholas county to avail themselves of the services of our county agent. Aside from his experience in this work and his ability to give any farmer in the county advice that is sure to result in a more profitable handling of his stock and crops, we know that Mr. Anderson is interested in his work and enthusiastic in his plans for bettering farm conditions in this county.

Already he has in prospect the formation of baby beef and lamb clubs among the girls and boys of the county. We are sure this will enlist the interest of many young people and prove profitable to them and to their parents. And this is but one of the many plans he has in mind to make farm life more attractive and the farm more productive.

The importance of the work of the county farm agent is not easily overestimated. If you will read the editorials contributed by Mr. Anderson each week in this paper and follow the advice given, it will mean more dollars in the bank for you at harvest time.

Worse Than Ever.

Senator Young's bill to repeal the present libel laws, which would have effectually muzzled the press of Kentucky, was defeated Monday by a vote of 28 to 9.

Following the defeat of his bill, Senator Young is said to have told reporters that he would introduce a bill applying only to newspapers published in first-class cities, which means those newspapers published in Louisville.

Senator Young's second bill is worse than his first, for his proposed measure is purely class legislation, inspired evidently by his dislike for one particular Louisville newspaper. The Mercury can not believe that he will introduce such a bill, when he has had time to think the matter over.

We are publishing in this issue some excerpts from a sketch of the life of Constantine Rafinesque, professor of Natural History in Transylvania University in 1818. The body of the famous scientist has just been returned from Philadelphia to Lexington. It is fitting that Transylvania should honor the man, who it must be admitted, was not appreciated it seems by either students or faculty a century ago. The removal of Rafinesque's body will serve to call the attention of Kentuckians to the brilliant history of the oldest educational institution in the State, the "first great Institution of learning west of the Alleghanies."

During the two weeks we have served a radio, we've listened in on eighteen renditions of "The Rosary," ten of "Silver Lak A Rose" heard about a hundred and fifty-six miles of jazz, two sermons and a grunt or so of which reporter, but forty-two hours sleep and narrowly escaped hearing Jim Reed, of Missouri, broadcast a speech, for which good fortune the Lord be thanked.

The directors of the Chamber of Commerce have several applicants under consideration for the position of Secretary. The directors feel that it is well to make haste slowly in choosing a man for this place. The success of the organization is primarily dependent upon its Secretary.

Senator Blanton, of Texas, would forbid rich American heiresses to marry titled fortune-hunting foreigners. Doesn't the gentleman know that the female of the species will not be forbidden anything? It was tried first in the Garden of Eden and failed.

The Lawrenceburg News wonders what pour Adam, tempted by one woman and falling, would do, today? He would either "fall for 'em" all, or run. If attacked by a herd of the modern Eugene Aram's he would be the latter theory.

A woman created a sensation, with Lexington all agog by appearing with her hair made luminous with phosphorous. Light-headed women always did attract the moth.—Richmond Register.

JUST A BOY.

Get to understand the lad—
He's not eager to be bad,
If the right be always knew,
He would be as old as you.
Were he not exceeding wise,
He'd be just about your size;
What he does things that annoy,
Don't forget, he's just a boy.

Could he know and understand,
He would need no guiding hand,
But he's young and hasn't learned,
How life's corners must be turned;
Doesn't know from day to day
There is more in life than play,
More to face than selfish joy,
Don't forget, he's just a boy.

Being just a boy, he'll do
Much you will not want him to;
He'll be careless of his ways,
Have his disobedient days,
Willful, wilt and headstrong, too,
Just as, when a boy, were you;
Things of value he'll destroy,
But reflect, he's just a boy.

Just a boy who needs a friend
Patient, kindly, to the end;
Needs a father who will show
Him the things he wants to know
Take him with you when you walk,
Listen when he wants to talk;
His companionship enjoy,
Don't forget, he's just a boy.

Through Efforts of Former Carlisle People, Body of Famous Scientist Rests Where He Taught in 1818

Saturday's Lexington Herald told of the removal of the body of Constantine Rafinesque, known in the scientific world as "the most learned man in America," from Philadelphia to Transylvania, Colleges, which institution he occupied the chair of Natural Science, from 1818 to 1826.

The idea of procuring the body was advanced last fall, according to the Herald, by Robert Spencer, who is a son of James A. Spencer, formerly of Carlisle. The Herald says: "The movement started with a letter written by Mrs. Norton to her brother, James A. Spencer, of Philadelphia, asking that a search be made for the grave of Rafinesque. The marker had been placed there in 1919 by Henry C. Brower, wealthy philanthropist, of Doylestown, Pa. Mrs. Norton had discovered the grave and gifts to the Rafinesque botany club of the University of Kentucky, which bears his name and that of his scientist, and to Transylvania.

"Young Spencer made an enthusiastic reply to his aunt's letter, giving the information that the burial place and information that the cemetery was near the entrance to Fairmount park. He also expressed a wish that Transylvania, which also claimed Rafinesque, might have his body, which was buried in a potter's field.

"Mr. Spencer with the aid and approval of Dr. Edward Woodruff Lewis then interested himself in getting permission to exhume the body.

"Dr. W. W. Keen, noted Philadelphia surgeon, was also interested in the movement. Mr. Spencer to Dr. A. C. Abbott, director of the school at a London ball by appearing with her hair made luminous with phosphorous. Light-headed women always did attract the moth.—Richmond Register.

The admission of the Mercury that there have been crooked elections in Louisville is fatal to its argument. What is possible in Louisville is not impossible in other parts of the State. It is notorious that there have been crooked elections in other parts of the State. And with both party leaders working together for the bonds a crooked election this year would be batter than ever before.

The Carlisle high school has enrolled one hundred and seventy-five pupils in the county high school, which is a record for the county. The enrollment is expected to reach two hundred before the end of the term.

70 Members At Luncheon

First Luncheon of Chamber Of Commerce Proves Most Enjoyable

FIVE VISITORS PRESENT

One of the most enjoyable gatherings of business men ever held in Carlisle was the Chamber of Commerce luncheon held in the basement of the Carlisle Baptist church, Wednesday. The luncheon was served by the ladies of the Baptist church, and was excellent.

Seventy members attended the luncheon. I. B. Ross, president of the organization, presided as toastmaster.

Five citizens of Winchester, two of them former citizens of Carlisle, were present for the luncheon and gave talks. The visitors were Hon. E. B. Lander, former pastor of the Carlisle Presbyterian church, Geo. E. Motch, former assistant postmaster, and Carl Bell, J. E. Risley, secretary of the Winchester Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Jack Hotsch and Mr. Homer McNeill.

Mr. Bell, who has been styled as a "one piece hand," presided at the piano, and with the assistance of Mr. Hotsch rendered some stirring. Parodies on a number of popular songs sung by the assembled crowd.

Mr. Hotsch gave a humorous reading and a humorous song which was encored heavily. As an entertainer he is second to none in Carlisle.

Rev. Lander, in his characteristic pleasing manner, paid a glowing tribute to Carlisle and her people. Some of the most cordial friends he ever had are those he left behind him in his three and half years in Carlisle, Mr. Lander said. "I've changed my dress, he said if he knew that all of you were going to be present he would have come in his tuxedo.

Mr. Stubbs spoke of the value of cooperation and told of the great benefit to be derived from a spirit of civic pride.

Mr. Hotsch gave a short talk in which he expressed his pleasure at being invited to attend the meeting. A number of songs were given.

There was scarcely a business enterprise in Carlisle but what was represented at the luncheon. It is safe to make this a regular feature of the Chamber of Commerce to be held quarterly, once a month.

At the close of the luncheon the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved That the members of the Carlisle Chamber of Commerce extend the ladies of the Baptist Church for the manner in which they served the most excellent luncheon was served to us at the noon hour.

Adjusting Agriculture to Present Conditions

Recently Dr. G. F. Warren, well-reading authority in U. S. on the subject, prices of farming, has set forth a view of the agricultural prospects for the next few years which are of very great significance to farmers. Dr. Warren indicates the belief that the general tendency of prices for the next 10 years would be downward, probably reaching the pre-war level. On that assumption he makes the following events will occur:

1. In general the average price of farm products will decline, likewise wages and taxes will decline but slower than the price of farm products. Fixed interest and debt payments will be high.

2. City industries will keep in adjustment by decreasing production when the product cannot be sold on a basis with wages paid.

3. Farm labor will be called upon to work harder in order to increase the output per worker.

4. The foregoing will cause an unusually bad period of agriculture.

5. For a time the average buying power of labor will be high, and the purchasing power of farm crops higher. This condition, however, will be greatly reversed during the first periods of unemployment.

6. During this period farmers will be low relative to retail prices.

7. Price fluctuations will be more violent than formerly.

8. Because of low profits and low prices, farmers will do less than usually inclined to rush from the low level of cultivating the high-priced things. The losses resulting from this will be more than normal.

9. Practically every year some product will be high.

10. Beef cattle are now at the low point in the present depression. Since this complete cycle lasts 14 years, it is to be expected that beef cattle prices will have a fair rise to either prewar prices or 3 or 4 years and that they will be high in about 7 years.

11. Hogs are at the bottom of a cycle of over-production. Since this cycle lasts about four years, it is expected that hogs will gradually increase in price and that they will be high relative to other commodities in approximately two years.

12. During this complete period of readjustment the expansion of agriculture will be checked and when the world becomes settled and again accumulates wealth enough to require an expansion of agriculture, there will be a long period of high-cost-of-living until agriculture again gets started.

During this period of reaction all farmers should practice economy in their operations; a few suggestions to this end have been made by Dr. Warren follows:

1. Exercise great care in buying anything that is much above pre-war prices. It will pay for itself quickly.

2. Convert debts that can not be paid into long-time obligations such as farm mortgages.

3. Raise more food for home and farm use.

4. Retail farm produce where ever possible.

5. Repair old implements instead of buying new.

6. Economize or plan your work in order to save labor.

7. Cultivate only your best land, leaving the poorest for pastures or to grow green manure crops.

8. Attempt to produce high quality produce.

9. Protect your farm land, if possible, when the tide turns this land will be valuable.

If these ideas as presented by this authority on the business phase of farming are given careful consideration and applied to the local farming conditions, it should be helpful guide to the farmers of this county and enable them not only to prevent heavy losses during the period of depression through which we are now passing but to be prepared to meet the demands of the market in the future supply of those commodities which are needed in this county and which can be profitable during the better years that are to follow.
