SCRAP LEAF PAYS OFFICERS' SALARIES

Economies put into practice by the management of the Burley Tobacco Growers' Co-operative Association have resulted in the saving of many thousand dollars, according to a statement given out by the publicity department of the Association at Lexington, Ky. Even the scrap tobacco from receiving floor flows, for which the growers formerly received nothing, is swept up carefully, cleaned of foreign matter and sold for the benefit of the farmers.

The return from this source amounted to the 1922 crop was sufficient to pay the salaries of the chief executive officers of the association, including the President and General Manager, the Director of Warehouses, the Secretary and Treasurer, the three salaried members of the Executive Committee, and have balance of $12,000 in the Association treasury from that source.

Re-drying of leaf tobacco in the Association's re-dryers during 1922, it also was stated, resulted in a saving of sufficient shrinkage of money, as compared with the cost of re-drying outside the chines, to pay the re-dryers installed by the Association.
