RECORD DISASTER YEAR KEPT RED CROSS BUSY

In 192 Places in United States Its Relief Operations Cost $737,603.

One hundred and ninety-two disasters resulting in 731 deaths and injury to 1,812 persons, rendering nearly 64,000 homeless and causing property loss estimated at more than $44,750,000, established a new record in the United States in the year ended last June 30, according to reports of the American Red Cross, in all of these disasters relief work of the Red Cross was applied by the Red Cross, which expended $737,603.97 through the national organization and the local Chapters in assisting stricken communities.

As the nation's chief relief agency whose service except over 42 years, the Red Cross is expected to be on duty almost as soon as disaster strikes any locality. This trust and confidence is amply justified by the increasing equipment of the Red Cross, which recently organized a mobile disaster unit of experienced workers ready in all parts of the country to respond on the fastest to a call for entire duty. The unit is capable of operating to relieve disaster areas without drawing upon the local community as it sets in severe communities to five states at the same time.

Skill, alertness and increasing skill of volunteer workers in more than 3,500 Chapters are reasons for the preparedness of Red Cross for disaster specialties, be the call for a disturbance in a restricted local area or for millions in relief funds for a staggering catastrophe such as the earthquake in Japan.

The Red Cross, however, is far from being self-satisfied, for the organization is giving the most serious consideration to measures for preventing disasters. Its relief administrative and rehabilitation policies have won for it nation-wide regard and the Chapters' work can always be depended upon for the most needy cases. The continued support of the American people through Red Cross membership. The annual enrollment will begin Armistice Day, November 11, and every American is urged to join or renew membership in the Red Cross.

Help yourself by helping others with your dollar. Red Cross membership. The dividend in good works is guaranteed.

This National Advertising Is Being Done For Your Benefit

Inducing the right sort of people to move to the L. & N.-served South; pointing out attractions of the Southland to desirable citizens, rather than to those seeking the bonanza of quick profits and temporary residence—this has been the work of the L. & N. Railroad ever since it became one of the great trunk lines of the nation.

Advertisements of the type shown here are running continously in the great farm magazines which circulate in the North, Northwest and East. They point out to the intelligent class of farmers the greater opportunities which prevail in the South, where weather, labor, and living conditions afford those of colder and more densely-populated sections.

These advertisements supplement the work of the Industrial and Immigration Department of the L. & N., and the result of this combined effort are apparent in every section of the South.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN

III

Glittering like Dragon-flies, several machines hummed and buzzed over the meadows, some circling in trial runs, others soaring far overhead, a few "looping" or diving down in spirals, as though intoxicated with the exhilaration of the sunset country air.

A small crowd of people, including reporters and photographers, stood near the monster which loomed up stately and majestic, like a huge bird. Its wings, spanning a score of feet, were of linen, and the engine, so glazed in that it looked like a greenhouse, was of the latest and most powerful make.

Barbara, clad in the beaver-lined flying cap and leather coat which Hugh had given her, stood close beside him, gazing at the machine with a mixture of awe and admiration. She was almost unused to traveling by motor-car, and the sight of the aeroplane, the instrument of destruction which had killed Jack Hamilton, filled her with a nameless dread.

Hugh, especially, was of too bright and wholesome a nature to indulge in misgivings, when the sun shone and all seemed well.

Returning one day with a friend from a shooting expedition, he had come therefore with no sense of impending disaster that he drove up to the Red Cottage and proposed calling. A small group of people, standing together on the main road, turned and cast wondering looks at the motor-car.

It was one of those glorious mornings at the end of September in which late summer and early autumn intermingle. Hugh glanced round with a pleased sense of appreciation. Then he saw the crowd.

The face of old Martha, who opened the door, was red and swollen with weeping. Her limbs trembled, as if from nervous shock.

For a moment she gazed at him blankly, half in amazement, half in fear; then, without a word, she burst into hysterical sobs and turned back into the house.

The color ebbed a little from Hugh's face. He looked at his friend in vague apprehension, but they silently followed the woman into the drawing room. Instead of being bright and fragrant with the flowers Barbara had put there, it seemed strangely cold, gloomy and deserted.

A chill fell on Hugh's heart.

"Where is Mrs. Stockley?" he asked hoarsely.

"Upstairs," sobbed Martha. She looked to the little bureau and picked up a telegram. Turning slowly, she held it toward him, and the flimsy paper trembled violently in her hands. Hugh took the telegram slowly from the woman. For a moment he looked incredulously at her frightened face, then round the familiar room, as if intending to read in it the truth, but with an obvious effort, he raised the telegram to his eyes.

The telegram fluttered, unheeded, to the floor. Hugh raised both his hands to his head, in a vague unconscious gesture, as they silently followed the woman into the dress
