Esch-Cummins BILL OF TRANSPORTATION ACT

Give The Railroads A Chance To Make Good Under The Transportation Act.

Of the large number of legislative measures which will be considered at the coming session of Congress, there are none of more importance to the railroads and people than those affecting the operation of the so-called "Transportation Act".

This act, commonly known as the Esch-Cummins Bill, became a law on February 28, 1920. As the railroads had barely begun to adjust themselves to the regulations when criticisms were directed at the measure and politicians started tinkering with the provisions.

There are many bills pending in Congress designed to repeal or modify important parts of this act, notably Section 15 (a).

In this month's issue of Nation's Business, Congressmen writes that the courts had already decided, that since the powers had been taken from the railroads the power to make rates the Government must itself make rates that would produce a fair return on the value of the property used for transportation purposes. The value of the property, for rate making purposes, is to be determined by the Government. Congress fixes the value of the property, fixes what is a fair return (at present 5½ percent on the value found) and fixes what the railroads may charge could the interest of the public be more perfectly protected?

So far under this law, the railroads have on an average earned as much as the rate of return fixed by the Commission. They are desirous, however, of giving the law a fair trial, but the political agitators, never satisfied, are not willing to do this.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN

At mid-day the heat became overdrive. Merciless in the sun, like a quivering mass of molten gold, drove down upon the shore; no breath of wind stirred the hot air; the lagoon, only its almost indigo blue, assumed an oily, stagnant appearance, as if shrinking to sleep with the lowering tide.

Within the shade of the single formed by one side of the hut and the hill to Mad Barbara's left, it was cool, if simple, couch of sun-dried coats. Find that the ground covered with sand and not a mountainous sea if she endeavored to rise, she gave the impression of being on the move.

Gradually, worn out, she grew calmer and a broken coconut, the shell of which was filled with water, stood upright between three stones. Dragging within the hut, she found a few biscuits, a bunch of bananas and a tin of meat; these, with the bamboo canoe which she had borrowed, formed all her worldly goods.

The girl listened, wondering dully at the existence of her companion, a being of a miserable sense of shame at her own weakness. Without pausing to rest, after fetching their coats and preparing food, she had worked hard at improving this dreary abode—carrying down bamboos for the walls and a roof, and above for a door, fetching other coats and palm-leaves for making a more thatched roof.

Presently, fed and disheveled, he appeared. He had shed all his clothes except breeches and shirt, and, strange as she thought, strangely in keeping with the scene around them, he looked, in her experience of a man whose life had been spent chiefly in the open, more roundings, often spent but the fringe of civilization, whose appearance corresponded to the call of attraction and to which she responded to the call of attraction and to which she responded to the call of attraction and to which she respon
