EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Mr. F. B. Engelken, vice president and general manager of the Kentucky Joint Stock Land Bank, believes we are even now in the midst of the passing of the tobacco industry in the Bluegrass section of Kentucky. In speaking before the Kiwanis club at Lexington last week, Mr. Engelken expressed the opinion that the introduction of tobacco growing in Central Kentucky is the greatest economic curse ever visited by this section; that it has brought a measure of prosperity at such a cost is deplored, and he and friends that it will take generations to undo the harm to agriculture.

Many of our readers will remember when such an attitude in regard to the growing of tobacco was not at all unusual among the older farmers of the Bluegrass. How bitterly did these Kentuckians who for generations had been growers of hemp, resent the butchery of forests and the desolation of fertile fields with this weed. Gradually, however, the temptation of this "money crop" converted the most die-hard crowd among us and to one day of hemp we now see hundreds of acres of tobacco in Kentucky.

Mr. Engelken's statement is rather sensational. He quotes figures to show that the bank resources of Kentucky declined from $25,232,-280 in July 1922 to $21,546,000 in January 1925. During the same period of time the bank resources of Tennessee, due entirely, Mr. Engelken claims, to dairy products in Davidson county, have increased from $13,042,780 to $2,553,500. Within ten years, thinks this gentleman, the tobacco growing industry will be a thing of the past in this section, the cheap land in Georgia and other Southern states, which has been shown that barley tobacco may be raised, monopolizing the business.

Though Mr. Engelken's views in the matter may seem extremely pessimistic, there are many Kentuckians who believe that the industry will become stabilized through the efforts of the co-operative association and that tobacco will soon be to be a profitable crop for years to come, it seems to be necessary that his prophecy of a return to a natural one after all. And we feel sure that the farmer who learns to make dairying and stock raising profitable, who develops his independence of tobacco and gets out of the one-crop rut will be, no matter how long tobacco is to remain "king" in this section.

If Mr. Engelken be right and tobacco is to cease to be the king of Kentucky, we should love to see hemp come back into its own. There has always been a fascination for the writer in a waving field of hemp, in its golden tints, its rich green colorings, in the best like rocks which gave to the autumn fields the appearance of the ramp of Persia. And who that has ever seen the warm glow of the hemp trees during the hills may forget the sight. We understand there is no good deal of hemp raised in Kentucky this year. We hope that it may prove profitable and that some of the beautiful fields of hemp in every Bluegrass county will become again a familiar sight. Nowadays, tobacco more hemp than we understand, but the seed is grown on Kentucky river bottoms and sold to the Wisconsin farmer.

An editorial in the current issue of Kentucky's Competition tells how Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart "chairman of the state of Kentucky made Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart "chairman of the state illiteracy commission" and that in a few years "130,000 adult illiterates, in Kentucky had been taught to read and write." "Although, in 1915," continues the Competition editorial "created the second illiteracy commission; before long North Carolina was actively engaged in similar reclamation work and was making its campaign cry, 'Onward Kentucky!' Minnesota, Oklahoma, New Mexico and other states rapidly caught the enthusiasm and embarked upon moonlight-school programmes." And so we go to Boston to learn of our pioneering in the realm of illiteracy. Of course we all know of Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart and of her work in Rowan county, of her organization of moonlight-schools, but that the first illiteracy commission ever established anywhere, was formed in Kentucky comes as news to this writer.

"Til blows the wind that profiteth nobody," and even a bit of price raising upon the part of the postoffice department may have its compensations. "Please send The Mercury to so-and-so," writes a subscriber. "I have been sending him a copy each week and paying one cent postage. Now it costs me two cents." And so the serving of subscribers with one copy of a country weekly will not be so popular a practice under the new postal rates.

POEMS THAT WE LIKE.

MOTHER O' MINE

If I were longed on the highest hill,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine,
I know whose love would follow me still,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine.

If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine,
I know whose tears would come down to me,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine.

If I were damned of body and soul,
I know whose prayers would make me whole,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine.
—Kipling

THE VIRGINITY

Try as he will, no man breaks what he loses
But has first love, no matter who she be,
Was there ever sailer free to choose,
That didn't settle somewhere near the sea?

Myself, it don't excite me nor appall me
To watch a pack o' shipping on the sea,
But I can understand my neighbour's views
From certain things which have occurred to me.

Men must keep touch with things they used to see
To learn their living, even when they are free;
And so come back upon the least excuse—
Same as the sailor settled near the sea.

He knows he's never going on no cruise—
He knows he's done and finished with the sea;
And yet he likes to feel she's there to use—
If he should ask her—as she used to be.

Even though she made him sick to bear or see,
Still, what the hell, of him will most.
If choose
He's likely to sit by, How comes such to be?

Parsons in pulpits, lanyusers in power,
Kings on your thrones, you know not well or see,
We're only one virginity to lose,
And after—Just it there our hearts will be!
—Kipling

BIG FRIEND FROM THE GLUE-BRASS STATE

A man in a New York town was about to introduce to a group of business friends a visiting acquaintance of his from Kentucky. "Let me introduce you to my friend, Mr. Gordon Hayes from the Glue Brass State," he said. Then, grasping red at his ridiculous blunder, he tried again:

"I want to make you acquainted with my friend, Mr. Gordon Hugs of the Grow-Blast State."

The others smiled broadly, and the speaker's color and confusion deepened, but he made another desperate attempt.

"I want you to know my friend, Mr. Gordon Higgs, of the Brew-Glass State."

A fourth attempt, if the introducer had intended one, was foreclosed by an irresistible burst of laughter from his business friends, and his Kentucky acquaintance is also. —Louisville Companion.

GRANTING OF PAROLES

(Elizabethtown News)

Upon the subject of paroles it is significant that Gerald Chapman, the notorious bandit now under death sentence, was paroled three times before the end of his confinement.

The first parole might have been excused under the pretext of his youth and his initial offense, but wrongs were inflicted upon society when the second and third paroles were granted him. Chapman's confinement or the death sentence could have any effect upon him, was the Chapman. He was beyond reformation. And paroles wasted his respect for the law. They made him believe that it was easy to get out of prison, even after having had decreed that he should remain in prison.

There could not have been any extenuating circumstances that induced the paroling of Chapman after he had been convicted of previous crimes. He was a known criminal. Only the sentence of death because he made an amenable convict was entitled to leniency could have prompted it. That is an extreme, but not a remote, parole should be based upon the circumstances of the case, and not upon the conduct in prison.

THE BUSY MAN

(N. Y. Ledger)

If you want to get a favor done
Ask your busiest friend,
And want a promise, safe and sure,
On which you may depend.
Don't go to him who always has
Much leisure on his hand;
But if you want your favor done,
Just ask the busy man.
The man with leisure never has
A moment he can spare,
He's always "putting off" until
His friends despair.
But he whose every waking hour
Is crowded full of work,
Forgets the art of wasting time—
He cannot stop to shirk.
So when you want a favor done
And want it right away
Go to the man who constantly
Works twenty-four hours a day,
He'll find a moment sure, somewhere
That has no other use;
And fix you while the idle man
Is framing an excuse.

OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS

THE CUCKOO

By Zeda Wyman

Agricultural Extension Department, International Harvester Company

No caterpillars are safe from the cuckoo no matter how ugly, how spicy they are or how well they are protected by webs.

The cuckoo eat so many hairy worms that the hairs often prove to the inner lining of the stomach and remain there so that when the stomach is opened it appears to be lined with a thin coating of fur.

The stomach of one cuckoo examined contained 250 tent caterpillars, that of another contained 217 tent caterpillars.

Dr. Forbush reports watching a yellow-billed cuckoo eating tent caterpillars. When he shook the tree it was given a little shake or a few knocks against the limb to kill it. Forty-seven tent caterpillars were eaten in six minutes.

Cuckoos destroy many more insects than they eat. They attack tent caterpillars and fall web worms or their nests, but they never disturb queens many of them with their secretions.

THE BIRDS' WORST ENEMY

A pet cat that was well fed at home killed 38 birds in one season and destroyed all the young birds in five nests.

The cat's claws, or "scoopers" and "rattrs" has been greatly overestimated. The custom of a ever birds will so not, but is supposed to be an extraordinary good "claw." He never said it kept the cabin free of rats.

One day when the cabin of the ship was fumigated the cat was gone. The next day the dead bodies of the rat and 24 rats were found.

A cat simply cannot be kept since shy as they keep out of sight, and it does not trap anything if it will set will bear any cat in catching rats.

What is the use of trying to feed, protect and keep birds if we allow our neighbors' cats to kill them?

There are 25 million cats in the country. If only one-fourth of this number destroy only one bird a day of these cats kills 6½ five birds in a season, we have a total slaughter of 6,250,000 song birdss killed every year in the United States.

Few realize how many vagrant cats there are. In 1911 the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals killed 304,000 stray cats in New York City. During an infantile paralysis epidemic there a few years ago, over 78,000 cats were killed in a short time.

All pet cats should be taxed. If a cat isn't worth paying a tax on it isn't worth keeping. The money obtained in this way should be used to kill stray cats.

All taxed or pet cats should be forced to wear bells which will give birds warning of their presence. We should make up our minds to get rid of the cat nuisance. By so during the number of cats we will increase the number of birds.

CORN SPROUTS IN NOSE

When Dr. V. B. Pinson, of Elkhorn City, reached home from a visit in Louisville, he found an emergency in the case of a little boy who lodged a grain of corn in his nose some days previous. The grain had sprouted and the lad's condition had become so serious that either had to be administered before the corn could be removed.—Harrodsburg Herald.

APRIL

April is here!
Listen, a blackbird is caroling near!
Low and sweet is the song he sings
As he sits in the sunshine with folded wings,
And looks from the earth that is growing green,
To the warm blue skies that downward lean,
As a mother does, to kiss the child,
That has looked up into her face and smiled;
Earth has been sleeping, and now she wakes,
And the kind sky-mother bends and takes,
The laughing thing in her warm embrace,
And scatters her kisses over its face,
And every kiss will grow into a flower,
To brighten with beauty a coming hour.

PERSONAL

TEMPER
(Exchange)

When I have lost my temper I have lost my reason too?
I'm never proud to anything which angrily I do.
When I have talked in anger and my cheeks were flaming red
I have always uttered something which I wish I hadn't said.
No anger I have never done a kindly deed or wise,
But many things for which I felt I should apologize.
In looking back across my life and I'm lost or sane,
I can't recall a single time when fury ever paid.
I have waked up many a morning with a mighty grouch on hand,
My tale of doubs regrettable no genuine would do.
I've gained nothing to my credit, I have always uttered something
But I've often gained an enemy, and made lost a friendship.
So I struggle to be patient, for I've reached a truer age,
I do not want to do a thing or speak a word in rage.
I have learned by sad experience that when my temper flies
I never do a worthy deed, a decent deed or wise.

SWIFT'S PRODUCE REVIEW

"It is time for producers to give considerable thought to the marketing of eggs; with warm weather approaching, it is of utmost importance that eggs be gathered daily, kept in a cool place, and marketed at least three times a week.

There has been little change in the situation on either live or dressed poultry during the week. There is a well sustained demand for all live and dressed poultry as it reaches the market. Any pronounced increase in receipts would be likely to cause lower prices.

KY. LAMB CROP GOOD

Kentucky's spring lamb crop has never been better than it is this year. The number of breeding ewes increased during the past year from eight to twelve per cent and from twelve to fifteen more lambs have been saved than last year, which means that the number of lambs is from twenty to twenty-five per cent heavier than last year. In addition 15 per cent of the lambs will be docked and castrated this year. Only five per cent of Kentucky's lambs were docked and castrated five years ago.
