"STICK, BROTHER, STICK!"

"Stick, brother, stick!" Is the favorable injunction to the poor member of that ardent advocate of co-operation, the Glasgow Times. In our opinion it is a slogan that every member of the Burley Co-operative Association would do well to ponder. It may serve to keep him from becoming impatient of results, or sniping down a "quick profit" in the interim of the kill-or-cure brand, but, overall, obviates the necessity for "Co-operation," in not carried on a complete cut-out. It would enable the marketing association to maintain a balance between supply and demand and it would keep the line between middlemen, reapers with internal inhibitions, yet promulgating the principle of rationalization and meticulously digested by progressive co-operation, dingd bobtailmanity and develop progressive extremists, intrespective, deliberative and cogitative faculties.

DON'T OVERPRODUCE.

It's "agin' Nature," we admit, to expect a man to restrict himself in the matter of tobacco acreage, when his neighbor is getting ready to "put out" more of the leaf than ever before. We agree that it is hard to do, but we are sure that recognizing the value of such restraint, preaching a voluntary reduction of tobacco acreage and learning to depend less on tobacco and more on other money crops, on hogs and sheep, scientifically handled, on dairy products and on poultry and eggs will bring the end sooner.

With the selling off of the surplus, coupled with the recent sales made by the Association, the tendency to overproduction should be avoided by our farmers, for their own good. Nelson county farmers, meeting recently at Bloomfield, presented a plan for the orderly and voluntary reduction of their tobacco acreage. Under this plan every landowner may grow as much as three acres of tobacco, regardless of previous plantings and on farms where more than three acres have been planted in the last crop. Here, the growers are urged to cut down to a "quick."

Some such plan, adopted by each county, would obviate the necessity for compulsory reduction. Reduction is a remedy as a complete cut-out. It would enable the marketing association to maintain a balance between supply and demand and it would keep the line between middlemen, reapers with internal inhibitions, yet promulgating the principle of rationalization and meticulously digested by progressive co-operation, dingd bobtailmanity and develop progressive extremists, intrespective, deliberative and cogitative faculties.

BIRDS ARE OUR FRIENDS

(By Zella Wigent, Agricultural Extension Department, International Harvester Company.)

Birds are our friends. They help us; we think they do.

They eat millions of insects and destroy tons of weed seed. They kill mice and other pests. They are constantly working for us in our trees and shrubs, in our gardens and our fields. It is cheaper to protect birds than to feed insects.

Birds make the world a more interesting place in which to live. We like their bright colors and their cheery songs.

We marvel at their migrations. We wonder where they have been and what they have seen from the time they leave us in the fall until they return in the spring, and what varieties they encounter on the way. We do not understand how their tiny wings can carry them such long distances.

We are interested in their family affairs. We like to watch them build their nests and rear their young. We like to see how they behave toward each other and toward other birds. We like to study their human qualities.

Birds are like folks—not all of them are good, and some of the good ones have bad habits. Still we condemn a bird because of a single bad habit. If we really know the bird and understand all that it does to help us, we overlook the bad habits just as we overlook the fault of a friend.

Let us get acquainted with these friends of ours. Let us learn their names and their peculiarities so that we may know the names and peculiarities of our human friends.

Knowing the birds will help us to enjoy country life. It will make every walk through the woods and every trip across the fields a pleasure more to us. To be happy in this world we do not need to have much but an increased power to enjoy it is a thing that are all desire.

A landscape without birds is like a house without pictures.

EDITOR GETS IN BAD

An Oklahoma editor just about ready to send his forces to grass, "pied" a couple of articles, one concerning a public letter, and the other a write-up of a wedding. He asked the office devil to get the two together—and he did.

Here is how he put the two together, and the mixture was not known to the editor until an angry preacher and the bride to be's father appeared on the scene:

"William Smith and Miss Lucy Anderson were disposed of at a public auction at their home one mile East of a beautiful cluster of roses on her breast and two white calves before a background of farm implements, the ceremony was begun in the presence of seventy guests including two milch cows and a mule and bob sled. Rev. Jackson led the municipal band a hundred feet of hay rope; the bridal couple left on a two dollars gang plow for an extensive trip with terms to suit the purchaser. They will be at home to their friends with one good cook stove and a few kitchen utensils, after two months from date of sale to responsible parties and some fifty chickens."—Exchange.

President Coolidge's salary, traveling expenses and the upkeep of the White House cost about $425,000 a year.

REVIVING HEMP

(Courier-Journal)

Revival of hemp-growing in Kentucky has been suggested by Representative Gilbert of Shelbyville, who says that the importation of millions of pounds of good hemp-rope each year by United States Navy built in the days of the frigates, Hedgie and Decatur, and by the merchant marine when the New England clipper ships, the Constitution era and the barkentines flying the Stars and Stripes were known in all the ports of call.

In those days barely a town on the Kingfisher was without its rope walk. Every farm had a few acres, and some devoted themselves to hemp. But that was in the day before the introduction of the cheap Mexican and Philippine sisal and jute, which have robbed cordage of all pride with the heirloom of Rueda, the chief grower of hemp-producing country. Abolition dealt the industry its first great blow. Slavery could not begin to endure (there to underbid) those cheap-labor fibers, and so luxurious hand-breaking machinery, even though they produced a finer article, were soon left behind. Hemp is still grown, and has been contracted for by the Government, but it is under the condition of the European market and not under the stimulus of the Kentucky's getting back in the game.

TAKING HOLD

(Louisville Times)

It is found that 512 out of town delegates registered at the Frye Annual Sportsmen's Banquet at Frankfort. Badgers run out early Wednesday. Make them, and a few women, who did not register, and did not get badges, were present.

The Frankfort meeting was almost as spicy, as large as the Kiwanis Annual Conference of the National Safety Protective Association in the New York last December, representatives of 1,000 cities of the United ——— attended by a number of Canadian. And, as Colonel McDonald says, Virginia's Commissioner of Conservation, Mr. Buck, in the course of his address, the delegates showed their interest by keeping their seats and listening to discussion.

The idea that it does not pay to tolerate fishless streams and game preserves when a good supply of game and fish can be established, is one of the discoveries, is at last taking hold in Kentucky.

EVERYONE MAKES MISTAKES

We made a mistake in last week's issue of the Sentinel. A good subscriber told us about it. The same subscriber was a little sore over the office box that didn't belong to us and that we had taken from the telephone and got 194. We asked for the box and got it back in a week, but we got home found it was No. 81. We are glad to make this correction at once. We arrived at the wrong conclusion the same way after that we made the error. We are sorry, and we hope our subscriber is able to get. Here and there in the county we have made mistakes. We feel sick, and like to crawl away and hide, but there is much need. We hadn't tasted meat for two weeks when we made the mistake, the ——— was missing because it needed a shave, and that's a spark plug, and it's run fine ever since. We have also learned the last week's issue of this paper.—Sentinel-News.
