ENHANCE BEAUTY OF YOUR HAIR.

Enhance the Beauty of Your Hair Because your hair is your crown, that beautiful hair does not develop in you. Women and men at any age may have beautiful hair and healthy scalp. Thousands of men and women are out of employment, are working for very small wages on account of white or gray hair. People that are unfortunate enough to be on the street, usually, generally known as dandruff, itching scalp, and hair falling. Find that by using S. & S. Hair Tonic they will eliminate all of the hair will be restored to it's natural color, the dandruff disappear and the hair will become soft and fluffy and when you arrange your hair it will stay fixed. This tonic is nothing hair and promotes the growth of the hair. It is a true friend. Every bottle guaranteed.

Sold by Power Lewis another 10c of your S. S. Hair Tonic at our office the first time in Paris. I wish to say that Mrs. Hallsville, Texas has used your tonic on her hair, also that of daughter and baby. The baby is three years old. They all were troubled with dandruff and Mrs. Wallingford's hair was turning gray as well. The dandruff has been entirely relieved for all of them and her hair has regained its original color.

Yours truly, DR. J. S. WALLINGFORD. Paris, Ky.

Dear Sir: Please send me one bottle of your S. & S. Hair Tonic. I have used one bottle and my wife's hair and my own are fully restored to its natural color. We used the same bottle and her hair was restored to it's natural color, a light brown, and mine to its color, a dark brown. There is no doubt in my mind that this tonic will do all you claim for it. I can recommend it to any one.

Yours truly, DR. THEO. SALLEE. 414 Russell St., Covington, Ky.

I have used S. & S. Hair Tonic and am glad to state that it will restore the hair to its natural color, still relieve the scalp of all dandruff. I consider it the best hair tonic that was ever placed on the market.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN

BY CLIVE ARDEN

COPYRIGHT BY THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

VIII

It is only a small sitting room, but all the worlds and all the heavens were gathered within the walls by the two who clung together in their despair.

Presently, almost reverently, the old parson left them and went out into the darkness of the night. Then, with the closed door between them and the world, they knelt down and prayed. Their prayer was not for themselves, but for the man who had come between them and happiness, but had the best that a man could offer to the woman he loved—the finest thing that life has to offer. They prayed that he might be forgiven his sins which seemed to envelop him in the darkness of hell, and that he might be given the opportunity of repentance and the understanding of the love of God.

Then they rose and sat down, hand in hand, and looked long into the eyes of each other, and they knew that they were one for all eternity.

"You've had at last catching her hand tightly and pressing it to his lips. "I'll tell you, Sonia, I've thought—"

He paused and drew his arm around her waist, and looked long into the fire and then turned eyes that were full of suffering, eyes that were full of love, and his head and held her close upon his shoulder, and he spoke in a voice that was low and tender.

"Sonia," she murmured faintly at last, "you do want me, don't you?"

Why I'm not sleeping with her for them, as you all surmised? Well—in your heart?"

"Mine!"

He nodded. "When Robinson was good to send me to my gods, you remember, I told you that I'd left a packet of Valhalla—that last night in London?"

Her eyes grew wide, and she caught her breath.

"I killed him!" he killed Baboona—a man—"

Sadly he closed her lips with his own, with quick perception of the effect which renewed civilization might have had upon the primitive instincts of the hotel.

"I owe my very life to you, wife of mine, to your courage."

His reflections were misplaced. Nothing of the sort would ever have occurred to Sonia. She would have done—who attempted to hurt you."

"Why, I—I—" Sonia flushed, perplexed. "Our life will be a rhythmical career."

Then Herbert fully recognized once more the old idea of truth and honor, duty, friends and fight banter, poetic phrases, strange conceptions which to human warm with love and life, were curiously impressive. Sonia was the child fallen from her—the real woman—the high ideal of womanhood.

"Sonia! Alan! Nothing matters but the fact that you are mine, and I am yours. Nothing matters but that we have found each other. Nothing matters but love. Do you understand?"

Her face turned, trembling a little, to his.

"And," she whispered, "I? "And I?" His arms tightened, and he kissed her lips. "You are the noblest lovely—for us both. Nothing matters but that. Nothing matters but what you were and what you are, the inferences, the—And there I was, thinking you a—Sonia, you must help you."

"It was—I—" she murmured brief. "Have you heard—?"

"Madge told me everything. She got the news of our rescue almost directly after you left. She told me of how like the very devil—by sea, air, and land—he had had designs upon you—gone to town your little heart alone, and—and—and—"

"I had to come away, Alan. I was afraid of myself."

"By Barbara, don't I understand!" Suddenly his eyes blazed in their old way, and he pulled up with a jerk of the table, causing the flame of the lamp to jump.

"Those blighted Pharisees! Those gossiping—"

"Oh, my dear!" She laughed again at his fierceness between tears. "I went to Dartbury," he explained briefly.

Her laughter died. "You went to Dartbury, Alan?" She glanced anxiously into his grim face. "What—what happened?"

He remained silent for a moment—then he spoke with a smile.

"Well, I—I—I'm doubtful whether—"

"Did—did neither—say—?"

"Not a word—a very few—could interchange of opinion! I honestly tried to reconcile your sartorial—your—your sense of—"

"I know. And he, of everybody concerned, might with fastness have considered—"

"Sonia!" she breathed.

He smiled his best smile.

"But not every inconsiderate rock, not every inconsiderate tree, could entice entrance to a subterranean passage leading to a bit of world. The narrowest down into gaither outside—into impossible—on the shore, which allowed a little fragile air and glimmers of light. This cave was tabu, to be haunted with the spirits of past beasts. I'm loath to speak of it, or of your friend, who—I was considered dead, out friends, very naturally, carried off my bleeding corpse—"

"Oh, Alan!" cried the girl who had listened as much from this with—"

"I thought you would personals Dr. Bureau or somebody to try again, of your existence—"

"I wanted to come myself," she confessed, and then stopped and threw her head back. "Oh, I—everybody was so big-headed. But what happened to Dr. Bureau?"

"Dr. Bureau's arrival was [illegible]

"Oh, Don't!" Cried the Girl,

with her own overwhelming joy in love from the very depths of her heart a voiceless prayer met thanksgiving. In the luminous, darkened eyes that met her own, she saw the look of utter, perfect love. Never had he seemed so gloriously strong, so perfect in spirit, than she raised her hands to feel the features that were dearer to her again, then drew the dear head, with yes, greater tenderness down to her breast and clasped it there.

"Alan, I can't—I can't—I can't—" Then she drew back from him, and gazed into his eyes, and her own were filled with tears. "It's—it's—it's—" And what because of the Dr Bureau you don't know—"

He sank into the big armchair, still keeping her to his arms. "It's quite a fairy story. You remember the wood in the east—above, Sonia, the—the—"

"Yes?" she breathed.

He smiled his best smile.
