A CORRECTION

There has been a report circulated, that I had been thoroughly cussed and discussed in justice to myself, and that the people who don't know the facts in the case may not be misled, I will say that any man who says that I saw him in a truck in which there was tobacco, or he is put it willfully, very badly mistaken. His eyes must have been in mighty bad shape, as I was not in any such truck. Then there was another street toted bark that cause it says "Oh yes, it is so. Walter Boyd caught him in Maysville and it cost him $100." Another lie, as Mr. Boyd, or the Association officials at Beauforters will testify tell you, that nothing of the kind ever occurred. The officials at Carlisle investigated the matter, to their satisfaction, which I can and them to do. I have never dumped any tobacco, or even thought of such a thing, and any one that says I have, is a liar. With gratitude and respect to my friends, and best wishes for the Burley Tobacco Growers Association.

"I have lost your ring, Hugh. It was left on the island with everything else."

"And you are wearing that instead!" said Hugh, with a frown. "What is it? A key ring?"

"Yes," remarked the vicar, rising from his oblation, "I had the case of a wedding party forgetting the ring; and I married them with a key ring!"

"Ha-ha!" laughed Miss Gordon. "I suppose it is quite legal?"

"Quite," breathed, of course, that everything else is in order and a priest performs the ceremony."

"Then," remarked the vicar, "I suppose it is quite legal!"

"Then Hugh came up and chatted, his usual cheery way, and somebody played and sang. . . . But all the time those two words beat upon her ear. God! was it true? Was this not once more to capture her? Was the nightmare to become the reality, and the splendid full—all the very air of heaven to flow into the dream? The morning's work was finished, and the afternoon at breakfast, she put on a dress of white muslin, and went to the beach, and her mother not yet there.

"A craving for freedom from some sort of bondage overcame her at last. The cold air stinging her face, the wind buffeting her about, dulled momentarily the agony within. The very brightness in the sunshine, and the splendid full—all the very air of heaven to flow into the dream!
