We would suggest a bit of mental therapy for the life of those who perspire, profane, fan and fruitle in the heat of a July sun. Comments, colloquies and curses on the state of the weather, though their effect, is not registered in Fahrenheit degrees, and for our sufferings almost as much as does that molten disk in the heavens. In this day of prohibitory mania, we suggest a statute to forbid discussion of the weather, with the penalty for the fraction of the law breaking a red flannel shirt for an hour. We'll venture to say that you have weather-bootleggers, just the same, and doubtless the writer would be one of them.

From "Urban Sketches," by Edward Anthony, staff cartoonist of the Atlantic Monthly, we take the following:

"Yesterday I went into a church, and today must tell how, even in banks, something new and strange may suddenly illuminate their hoary features.

The bank building is made as impressive as the circumstances of the bank will allow. Ancient stability is the ideal. But, in any case, it has been built in a great hurry, by very busy architects and contractors, who conspired to make out of it something that was a mere advertisement, a gesture of power and an expression of profound perceptability.

The gentlemen who sit at mahogany desks, attended by little stenographers in flimsy cages and shirtwaists, are gentlemen who love to look out over the commercial landscape, and watch the ran and shadow of prosperity and depression succeed each other as the clouds pass over; who find business talk the only real talk with meat on its bones; whose pleasures are found in the approved channels of the club luncheon and the golf course.

The bank is filled with young men and women keeping the records, behind glass partitions and wire-settings. I can see them now—small children, young men and women,—records made by the perfect grammar-school penmanship, their finely articulated and resilient hands poised over the adding machines, as they sit on stools four feet above the floor, and count and count after year, in the bank.

And the young men with strong, straight bodies, with splendid foreheads and eyes, and all that suppressed force and alertness of the athletic male, who, with a little pen, pen-holder and ink-well, sit over them, which add to the eternal records of trivial transactions.

How it is, you think, that these girls and boys, in the flush of a precocious youth, with one foot in the door to a world filled with beauty and adventure and romance, will stay here in this depleting experience, like so many clams in a pod, satisfied, open, and that saucy legacy of their youth runs out, to be served to the gods of business, of finance, and of industry.

Then it is not difficult to God and to nature cannot be solved.

No wonder they feel impelled to say to these young girls, as to young men, the pious expectations what your endowments are and how many generations it has gone to the making of you; and won't you develop one of the talents that will, in some degree, repay that generous heritage, which has made you so graceful a person and perfect? Won't you apply your hearts to something that is consonant with this holy perfection and dexterity, which you possess, and love the open earth, and poetry, and learning, and, though your looking may be bound here, your inspection may have no cage of the heavens, your wings may be the winds, run on the top of the homecoming waves, and upon the mountains like a shepherd.

And if you were talking to these girls and boys, you might, of old some emotion by telling the story of Hezekiah for as a man who stood out under the eternal sky and in which he saw on sea or on land, and got the experience of a man-of-war's man employed in the tasks befitting a man.

The flying ploughshares of the Lord grow every month! The Lord God make their medicine strong! What time, and how, if you would save your immortal souls, without loss of the dark confinement—after the Great Compromise and to belong to the Kingdom of Heaven—as workers of many a note of hold.

For, unless there is a war, the girls and boys stay in the bank. Either they have special and domestic responsibilities already, or they await quite the inevitable hour when matrimony sets them, and binds them with silk bands, and spins them up in a cocoon as the spider does the housing flies.

It was into one of these spacious temples of industry that I went yesterday, and on a white marble bench, at one end of the long hall, sat an Italian peasant-woman, or a Greek, with a red shawl over her head, her hands folded in the lap of her black skirt, immediately that proud bank collapsed. In the presence of a piece of coal from a mine, it melted into a mere lump, into something that was fit only to make a pedestal, for the time being, for this solitary figure.

There she sat in her ancestral sea grass, indeed, in a grandeur which made a mere toy of that banking. She put it to complete shame. She was real, and all that imitation marble and stupid bronze, that nothing about of clerks and wire contraptions of officers, was unreal. She was eternal; they were ephemeral. She was music, and there seemed to be a certain sound of trumpets and a shaking of voices, and that bank was the scene of a strange and fleeting ceremony.

The woman sat there, totally disregarded, of course, and yet around that figure was the whole genealogy of beauty,—the beauty of earth, not the beauty of banks,—and a multitude of the heavenly host."

Hooey! So-called and substantial of the financial world will say. The great god Success, as we see him, in terms of dollars, is attacked in one of his very temples. What of the "flying ploughshares of the wild geese?" we hear them say. "Gaping at wild geese, wandering about strange lands in foreign seas won't buy gasoline, to say nothing of food and clothes, feathers and finery, bags and bills and tickets." All of which has been made the consummation devoutly to be wished by the writer of these verses in the terms of the dollar. A Moloch this force has become and to us, singing the siren song of possible wealth to be gained, dazzled by the glitter of gold, to whom, stealing their souls away from them and making efficient automatons who put figures in rows, punch adding machines and time-clocks and do routine work. Now and then a victim reaches the pinnacle of dollar-success and sits comfortably behind the Mosaic. Now and then one breaks away and makes a "failure," tasting of the medicine of the Red Cross, or in the flying Bohemianism of the wild geese, drinking of the cup of strange seas, glorying in the sunshine, poor in the coin of commerce, rich in Nature's lore.

Hooey! Hooey! So be it. Perhaps that is why the writer sees a certain poetic justice in poverty regarded as a business; loves a country town, where one hears the rumbles of the train and greet the dawn and be soothed by the quavering call of the little rooster, and whose name is a and misnomer where everyone is Tom and Bill and Jim; where the sun-dappled face of humanity frequently defy the Mobeth of the dollar glorified and where, hearing behind, one may within a few moments step into the quiet and twilight peace of woodland pastures.

This, at least, is left to us who live in the country,—of the joy of life that was to those adventurous souls who lived when the world was young; who lived in the days when the salt spray in their faces, to the wild geese making southward in the late of that something which lurks beyond the purple rim of life horizon.

Aroused by the public clamor of her citizens, enroute to Nebraska for blacksnake, a soldier of fortune and so forth (especially "and so forth" and "here's how") who were unable to reach our model road by reason of the loss of tires, axles and springs, we, doubt, but we forsakes rocks and snapped backbones, during the passage of the Great terrapin of the State's line between the bridge and the Middletown road. Fate has decided to build a pike there.

At this is written the editor of this paper expects to be present at the midsummer meeting of the Kentucky Press Association. Bunks, paper hounds and all honest men against us are urgently requested to declare a mortal-ruin during our absence.

An English physician urges we should study our children's minds and hearts. He "discard clothing" as much as possible. This is carrying a fad, no doubt, but so far as we are able to observe, absolutely superfluous.

Her Father's Specialty

In a public school in New York city, attended almost exclusively by foreign born children, a teacher of one of the lower grades who endeavoring to complete into forty pertaining to the family history of her young charges for the offspring of Israel.

To each child she gave a blank to be filled in with the proper answers. One rugged little girl gave lengthy consideration to the following question:

"Name the occupation of your father."

This in the space provided she filled in:

"Dotta."

The teacher, collecting the forms, struck this particular word and passed it back to the child.

"Rachel," she asked at length, "what does 'dotta' mean?"

"It means my papa is quite business," explained the child, "so I writes it down 'Dotta.'"

"But he doesn't be ever work?" inquired the teacher.

"No, ma'am," said the child subtly; "he don't never work—he writes!"

OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS

HAWKS

By Zella Wigent

Agricultural Extension Department, Kentucky Harvester Company.

There are many good hawks. The red-tailed hawk is one of our best. Gophers, rats and rabbits are its chief food.

There are two general classes of hawks—the buzzard hawks, and the killer flying, or true hawks. All of the buzzard hawks are more useful than harmful. They live almost entirely alive in movement and are therefore more often caught in their swiftest flying exercise. They are also specialized in hawk and owls. Let us learn to distinguish the true hawks and the buzzard hawks only those that are really harmful.

In 1883 the legislature of Pennsylvania passed the Pennsylvania "act" which provided for a bounty on hawks' heads and animals' feet to be harmful. In less than two years 100,000 hawks and owls had been killed and $96,000 had been spent. In the meantime the farmers had seen a great pest and the law was soon repealed.

The red-tailed hawk is a fine hawk and is one of our worst chicken thieves. It is not often allowed to roost chickens and in the summer months it lives on mice.

Only three hawks are on the official black list of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. These are the Cooper's hawk, the American goshawk, and the sharp-shinned hawk.

THE GROWTH OF THE AUTOMOBILE

In 1900 there was an automobile for every 7,687 persons in this country. In 1925 there is an automobile for every 7.4 persons. In other words, there are now just 1,039 times as many automobiles today as there were twenty-five years ago. The number is now twice as many as five years ago and nearly ten times as many as ten years ago.

There are two cars for every family in Canada, and almost enough seats in them to take every man, woman and child in the United States riding at the same time. The automobile has revolutionized business and social life in this country, for the better, as nothing else has.

It has only been thirty-one years since Haynes, of Kokomo, Indiana, invented the automobile. In fact, if we are not mistaken, almost as soon the Wright Brothers were flying in the air at Dayton, and now while millions upon millions ride daily in cars only a few thousand have played the air in planes. The progress in aviation has been slow and disappointing, while the automobile—well, there are more of them than bicycles and bath-tubs combined.

Courtney Ryley Cooper

Has a Japanese top, you say? Yes, he can easily qualify for the beauty prize among bald-headed authors. This gentle springald hasn't had much experience, eh, no? During his school days in Kansas City, Mo., he ran away from home to become a clown in a circus.

Then his education really commenced. It progressed when he became press representative for a big show. Later he was the only Child Welfare Director. Next he was a special writer on Kansas City Star. Now he is a Hollywood scenario writer and war correspondent. He has written 20 novels and 500 stories of exciting and jungle animal life for more than 20 years. Besides these 20 novels, scores had mostly in the Western field, and "Three Name Men" and "Three Name Men" and "Legion" the all country romance soon to appear in this paper.

POEMS THAT WE LIKE.

THE PASSING EVE

(McCallum)

I hear a farcoff bell, a drowsy clang that tells the herd all-clear to pastures green;
The cricket chirps beneath a moon so mellow
It's supreme to gentle echoes of day has ebbed, a far-retreating bird,
And left the landscape to soft shadows and dew.
To watch the moonlight's fairy silver ripple
North-wandering clouds, till deepest night has fled
The world of field and forest, rocks and dell,
Of man and beast, and slumber
Of ceaseless active forces of tense duty.
Such, O my soul, shall not thy passage be,
After the conflict, calm and dim-lit eve,
Of low-sweet peace, and then, a restful sleep.

CONCILIATION

It's Summer, and the radiance
Of night has splashed the sky,
To tempt the lovers, sweeting up,
Repeating Baker's "Try!"
For once a year ago I saw
The sky through Spanish moss
Of trees that formed a patient wateroaks
Like tangled, silken floss.

The rippling, rocking water's sound
In the cypress-hooded bayou,
Where lovers' canoes were found,
Pulsating slowly through.
The palmetto, with its starlit fest,
Went creeping through the vines
To the far, tortured sigh
That trembled in the pines.

And now I see the traffic crawl
Like alligators slow,
Replete with business of food,
Or fleeing from the foe;
The smell of gasoline and oil—
Of modern life and love—
Conveys a constant restlessness
That knows no curb or stop.

Although I long for summertime
I'd try to solve the mysteries
Of the Winter's snow,
And, country-bred, perhaps I'll go
By vacating, to know
The streets of New York.
No matter where I go!
—Jessie Novak in the New York Times.

THE GENTLE HEIFER

(Lexington Herald.)

We are strong for cows. We have observed the cow from many angles, and we have seen a lot of good points in her. But here is the very best we have ever seen. Making this popular farm animal the subject of an editorial, the Baltimore Sun has this to say about Maiden Cow:

"The Cow is a female quadruped with an alto voice and a countenance in which there is no guile. She travels with the pump in the production of a liquid called milk, provides the ice cream trade, and at last is skinned by those she has befriended. Her principal commodity are.

"The young cow is called a calf, and is used in the manufacture of chicken salad.

"The cow's tail is mounted aft and is universal joint. It is used to disturb marauding flies, and the tassel on the end has unique educational value. Persons who milk cows and come often in collision with the tassel have vocabularies of peculiar and impressive force.

"The cow has two stomachs. The one we see on the ground floor is used as a warehouse and has no other function. When the cow is filled she now retires to a quiet place where her ill manners will occasion no comment and devotes herself to lathing. The raw material thus conveyed for the second floor and the interior of her face is pulverized and delivered to the auxiliary stomach, where it is converted into cud.

"The cow has no upper palate. All of her teeth are parked in the lower part of her face. This arrangement was perfected by an efficiency expert to keep her from gumming things up. As a result she utes up and gums down.

"The male cow is called a bull and is lionized along the Colorado, fought south of the Rio Grande and shot in the vicinity of the Potomac.

"A slice of cow is worth 8 cents in the cow, 14 cents in the hands of packers and $2.40 in a restaurant that specializes in atmosphere."

The Washington monument was erected at a cost of $1,300,000.

LOCAL

PROGRAM

Now that Chautauqua is over, and we have all enjoyed a week's vacation, the Lyric will open Saturday night with one of the best pictures of the season.

The production to be shown Saturday is "The Warrens of Virginia," an adaptation of David Belasco's successful stage play of the same name. A wonderful historical drama of the old South in which Robert E. Lee and U. S. Grant are the central figures.

Monday—Comes your old favorites, Thomas Meighan and Lois Lee in "Coming Through," the story of a rascal, "Bel Rock," by Jack Bethea. This is a gripping drama of the West.

Ice tattoos to the grandchildren school entertainment may be obtained at The Mercury office on or after Saturday.

The trial of George Miller and Russell Hadley, charged with having liquor in their possession, was postponed until Saturday when called for trial in county court Monday.

Mrs. Lucy Armstrong fell in the yard at the home of her mother-in-law, Charles Ross, on East Main street Tuesday afternoon and fractured her right arm above the elbow.

Neal & Sapp have installed a new oven in the bakery in the Greater building and have resumed baking. Their plant was shut down as the result of operation for several weeks.

Now that the Fourth of July is past, we're about over the celebrating. Some one has been making the night air hideous with fireworks every evening.

Wheat threshing has started throughout the county and while the acreage is short, the yield per acre is fair. None of the crop has been damaged, and no rain has been established.

1,091 passenger car licenses and 97 truck licenses have been issued by County Clerk Worrell to date. It is expected that more than 1,200 passenger car licenses will be issued during the year.

Rains during the past week have been of great benefit to growing crops, and farmers report one of the best prospects for corn in years. Tobacco is doing fairly well, although a little late.

During the electrical storm last Friday afternoon, Mrs. Russell Lawrence received a painful cut on the arm when the pane of a window which she was opening, broke, the flying glass striking her.

The first children to be sent out by the Church-Juniata Farm is a selection of ten days in the country under the same plan as the one we have Louisville on Saturday, July 18. Anyone who will take a child or two for ten days is asked to let Rev. Thompson know.

The three Carlisle banks and the Moorefield bank declared dividends on July 1. The First National Bank declared a five per cent quarterly dividend; Deposit Bank five per cent semi-annual dividend; Farmers Bank two per cent quarterly and the Citizens and Moorefield Deposit Bank four per cent semi-annual.

Candidates in the Democratic primary next at the court house Tuesday and draw lots for positions on the ballot. The position in which names of the candidates will appear will be published in next week's issue. Candidates without opposition will not have their names on the ballot.

Robert Mayer, of Harrison county, for whom a warrant was issued on the charge of possessing liquor when he was near leaving the residence of Bruce Kenney during the raid for prohibition officers there several days ago, was arrested by Harrison county authorities Monday. He was released on bond for the appearance for trial in the Nicholas county court Saturday.

Quotations on the Cincinnati livestock market Wednesday morning: Hogs, steady to 10c lower, with prices ranging from $14.85 for packers and butchers to $9 for fat cows. Cattle, steady; steers, from $10 for choice to $5 for common; heifers, from $11 for choice to $2.75 for canners; calves, steady to 50 cents higher, with prices ranging from $10 for veals and weiners to $6 for common.

The eighth annual young people's summer conference under the auspices of the Young People's Missionary Societies of the Louisville and Kentucky Conferences, M. E. Church, South, is in session at Asbury Kavanaugh, Crestwood, near Louisville, this week. The camp started Monday and will close next Monday evening. Girls of any church may attend the camp at a moderate price for board and lodging. Miss Elizabeth Cole, of this city, is present dent of the camp.

Lack of space prevents The Mercury giving a complete list of each member which has appeared on the Redpath program, but suffice it to say that each number has been well received. The program is far ahead of any ever offered here before. Mr. Parsons, the superintendent, and members of the tent crew have made many friends during their stay here and will always receive a welcome upon their return. The talent this year is investing in motor busses instead of by train.

PERSONAL

A PRAYER FOR A LITTLE HOME

Lord, bless my little home
Let love walls, and fluted tiles,
Be always a view for miles.

Let firelight and deep chairs,
Small water heater—

Let the tarsal talk in little nooks,
Let rain colors, rows of books.

Give picture on each wall,
Let many things of all.

God send us a little ground,
Let trees stanching round.

Homely flowers in brown sod,
Let there be, by many nods,
Let lilacs, where winds blow,
On our home, and all we know.
