LICENSING CATS.

In the night all cats are gray.
—Cervantes

Dog owners are required by law to pay an annual license tax. Why not such a tax on cats? But cats do not kill sheep, you will say. No, but they have helped reduce our native Kentucky song birds fifty per cent in the last twenty years, we have somewhere say. Birds are of great importance to mankind. Not only to stop selling gasoline after today, to stop selling gasoline after today, but their destruction entails too many loss. we are not wounded in the pocketbook." But if you dig to the ground and plant seeds and raise crops or if you eat fruit from the trees, the destruction of birds does jolt the old purse, whether you realize it or not and we can prove it to you.

The United States Department of Agriculture estimates that the nation's crops [illegible] loss annually to American farmers and that insects destroy [illegible] crops annually. In a [illegible] trying to get rid of the pests. What extermination would be [illegible] crops today are worth if not for insect-fighting birds? For instance, [illegible] with a brood of spiders and [illegible] and consequent mental degeneracy, if any . . . He lights on [illegible] the masterpiece of the insect [illegible] spider's home, with a ferocity unworthy of his usual good-natured [illegible] he utterly loiters or he [illegible] better as you will. Witness [illegible]

Going on the Trouble With [illegible] Country. To our mind, if any, the trouble with this country is that we have too many [illegible] of Tom Marshall's good friend [illegible] at bit to go all the way to some of his dams fool poetry like an Edgen, Southerner.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

We reckon about a million people have read that there and how true, and rolled their moonly eyes up todes heaven in [illegible] of pious idiocy. But to our mind, of any, but for the sake of national unity we would suggest the following revision.

Fools write poems about a tree,
But only God make a fool like me.

Now that there is truthful, accurate, fearless verisimilitude and intellectual. What we are lacking about is that the poet which he writes the original thought seemed to be under the impression that while God only made a fool of him, he did not make the fool that wrote the poem. We would suggest the following revision.

Fools write poems about a tree,
But only God makes a fool of me.

Our thoughts that Joyce Kilmer, had he lived, would have seen his self-deception and would have [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and
