A CORRECTION

The Mercury published last week an item, which was taken, in good faith, from a Paris paper, that Coffey Springs, was fined $50 and costs, in Judge Fannibelle Sutherland's court for selling Jamaica ginger. The statement that Mr. Sellsy was fined for selling Jamaica ginger, The Mercury finds, upon investigation, is not true. Mr. Selby was arrested and fined in the Paris city court, but on a totally different charge and not for selling contraband beverages of any kind. The Mercury regrets that annoyance was caused Mr. Selby by the publication of this article and voluntarily makes this explanation.

A CORRECTION

We wish to publicly state that the article appearing in last week's issue of the Mercury, which stated that Smoot Bros. had been arrested for selling Jamaica Ginger is absolutely without foundation. Neither of the Smoot Bros. was arrested on this or any other charge. S. W. Smoot was a witness in the case against Scott and this is the only connection he had with the case.

This article is a fabrication pure and simple, dished out to get the attention of parties, and we respectfully ask that same be corrected.

The communication printed above was handed The Mercury Tuesday and we gladly give it space therein. In extenuation, however, of its publication of an item in the issue of last week, to the effect that "Smoot Bros. were fined $50 and costs for selling Jamaica ginger." The Mercury wishes to state that if this item was "faked" as stated above the garbling was not done by this paper. The item was taken from the Bourbon News, which "dated it up in its early news, issue of May 8th.

"S. Smoot forfeited a $200 bond for his appearances on a charge of selling Ginger" and his brother, O. Smoot, was placed under a $100 bond to appear for trial at a later date."

The Mercury republished this item in good faith, as a matter of news from the Paris press, especially believing that the proceedings of the Paris court had been correctly reported. The item was published in the usual course of the week's news and without intent to injure in any manner any of the parties whose names are signed to the above card.—Editor.

ROSE HILL

Mother's Day was observed Sunday with songs and recitations that had your mind back to days of childhood. A very good crowd was present.

CHAPTER XIII

And on the Day After Tomorrow

Lee slept the clock around, for, when he rose, he refreshed and restored, except for his bruised and battered limbs, the sun was in the same part of the sky as when he had gone to sleep.

For a few moments the memory of that grotesque struggle seemed like something that he had read in a book. Then, bit by bit, it began to become a part of memory, recorded.

But it was not until, looking in the mirror, he saw the scar of the tunnel, plainly visible in the cleft overhead, that he realized the whole episode had been a thunderbolt driven, from the hostile, futile struggle.

And even then Lee could not convince himself until he had gone back to Peter's kitchen and ascertained that it was really there, and looked at the hatchet on the butt of the stove, and stood beside the little gate.

Then, very pointedly, for his hands were almost red raw, he clambered up the cliff and made his way through the tunnel. He did not, as he would ever want to visit Polly's gold mine again.

He had suspected all the while that there was a myth, and even now he was not convinced that there was gold in it.

But for was in his heart, joy overflowing, for all his troubles were at an end. He was going to Joyce, to make her his wife, to take her away!

And his heart thumped at the anticipation of that incredible time, and he felt that he could scale the big house like a boy. He looked at his hands and his clothes, and started off on a run. As he went up the ascent a mob of half-breed and Indian children came pouring out of the schoolhouse. And there in the entrance Joyce was standing, watching them—and then, approaching.

She saw him at last, gravely as he came down the hill, and knew at once from his look on his face enough to make the breaking of the news less of a shock to her. But the tears rolled down her cheeks as he told her of her father's death.

"Joyce, darling, I can't help feeling that it's the very thing—in the end—for the best. I'm not sorry, and I don't want you to be sorry. I know that—some how—I have always known my father was no longer alive. The bond between us was very close, though I was sorry from him so many years."

Lee told her about the discovery of the mine and his encounter with Labouet, shutting over the story of the Indian's attack on Joyce. Joyce was caught sight of his hands, and was all sympathy and concern for him, and led him into a hot bathtub then and there.

Father Lacombe came to visit an old Indian in the neighborhood, and the two talked a long time, and then as a simple meal together in the presence of the children, who stared at Lee over their soup dishes out of their large, black eyes.

"It is strange, the mine being so near the house," Joyce said, as they left the priest back and went to bed shortly after that there was a quiet. We never were quite sure that my father hadn't a decision on that subject, and that Labouet, who was devoted to him, wasn't honoring him.

"Old Labouet must have been living there for a long time. He had some peculiar ways, I remember. I think he would have killed him once, if he had dared, for a fancied slight.

She reverted to her father's death, and Lee was presently compelled to put her particularly.

"We may have suffered a stroke and a loss, but we're not going to mind it," he said. "At any rate, his death was instantaneous. You may be sure of that."

It was when he spoke of his discovery of her mother's grave that Joyce showed the most emotion.

"She was it such a long time ago," she said. "I can't remember her. I was too young. But I'm glad that she died my father and that they were buried side by side. They would never have been happy apart, and I remember I used to pray about it. Now, I suppose, they are together in her grave. I suppose that is part of my feeling of relief that I never wanted her to be near him where he was buried."

It was after dinner that Lee asked Joyce to marry him, and Joyce, who had been before very much in love, said:

"Oh, Lee—when?" she asked. "Today, tomorrow?"

"Oh, not today, Lee."

"Then, darling, and we'll spend our honeymoon in the log house. We'll be a day or two there, and then we'll start for Edmonton. I'm sure that's what father would have wished, and we shall often visit the log house in the happiness of the years to come."

"Yes, Lee," Joyce was exhaling her happiness in the manner that always distressed him so much. "I want to go there, and I know you will feel the need inexpressible pictures her.

"And I've laughed in my sleeve and chortled, 'Ha, ha, ye soulless. On the morrow you shall be my wife, and I'm going to steal it first.' And so I've married them, and they don't know it yet. Ha, ha, ha!' Oh, Lee, I'm very long, merry joy, before they're married, and I'm sure they're grieving over it now."

"Oh, Father, my dear, from this you within to that and one wins obey her honor um, we should answer to my name," she said. "Oh, Lee, I'm so happy! Oh, Father, my dear, my dear, my darling! Oh, the jolly blood, and the jealousy of the grand York!"

"Then I speak to them verra soft, and they look soft, and they do our wooing. I say, ye're built caught fear, and what's done comes be undone. Then what matrimony's for, to help a man and a woman to overcome their natures. 'Tis a grand checkpoint—is matrimony. And, if ye can't be a gentleman—I go on, speaks verra soft to them—if ye can't be a gentleman—I'll be a gentleman for you. Ha, ha, ha! Oh, Lee, for now I saw that ye were two I discovered natures—'Darling of the scent'? they burst out laughing and 'ye' that they go all out in arm together."

"I hope you haven't Miss Polly and myself in mind, Father," said Lee, laughing. "I'm willing to stop that poor trap tomorrow, and I'm more willing to stop here in this room."

Father Mcintosh burst out laughing spontaneously. "Oh, Lee, I'm glad that you're willing to stay here in this room."

"Ye ye not, Anderson, a woman that wants a bottle time to prepare and a bottle in her mind's eye before she becomes one."

Answer To Last Week's Puzzle

The Railroads Run Every Day in the Year—And in All Kinds of Weather

During these beautiful Spring days, when the sun is bright and the weather warm, remember that the railroads of the country rendered exceptional freight and passenger service all during the winter, when snow was on the ground, roads impassible, and weather conditions hampered every other mode of transportation.

A great many Americans have come to look on the railroads as something to be taken for granted, and to lack appreciation of the extraordinary service rendered to the Nation as a whole, and to each individual community, by the great rail transportation systems.

Operating for the past four years on a property-investment net Return less by over one billion dollars than that allowed by law, the railroads of this country are delivering a more efficient freight and passenger service than ever in their history. They deserve both your patronage and your good-will.

Let us show you proven methods of painting metal tanks.

Kurfees Paint is "tempered" just like the finest steel in a keen blade—it is developed from pure raw products, by gradual stages and through many thorough processes into a weather-proof paint that "sets" with a surface of tough film that glistens like polished enamel.

And—more than that—it spreads easily and smoothly, and covers an unusual amount of surface per gallon.

Ask Any Kurfees User

Whether you paint for Beauty, for Preservation, or for both, Kurfees Paint has special advantages to offer you. Every one who has ever used Kurfees knows that the claims made for it are not "stretched." By running Kurfees paints in accordance with the law printed plain in good, large letters on the label, you will get satisfaction. Ask your dealer for Kurfees Paint, and they will be glad to tell you. Ask, too, for a quarter souvenir, his made many property owners realize that there is something different and better about Kurfees Paint. Of course there is—it is "tempered to the weather."

NEW BUILDING AT K. F. O. S. TO BE DEDICATED MAY 27

The program of entertainment adopted by the Trustees of the Kentucky Female Orphan School in April, 1924 is working along wonderfully toward a splendid fulfillment within the five year limit set. The building plans, which included the erection of a new Academic building, a new Domestory building and the remodeling of parts of the old buildings, are being carried rapidly to completion.

The Academic building, to be known as "Starks Hall" is completed and will be furnished in time to be used for the Commencement Exercises on Wednesday, May 27.

This Academic building contains Auditorium, Study Hall, Gymnasium, Library, Reading Room, three Laboratories, fourteen Class Rooms, eight Practice Rooms and the Administration Offices. The Construction is of concrete and brick, a fireproofed structure of splendid design and attractive appearance. The building cost $200,000.00 and will be dedicated free of debt.

The seventy-sixth Commencement will be held in the new Auditorium from 10 a. m. to noon on May 27, 1925. Nineteen young women from among the one hundred-forty students will be graduated. Rev. Rev. Zach Sweeney of Columbus, Ohio, will deliver the Commencement address. Arrangements are being made to serve lunch to the hundreds of friends of the institution who will be present on that occasion. The friends of the school everywhere are invited to attend.

FARMERS SHOULD HOLD LAMBS UNTIL MARKETABLE

Sheep farmers in the spring lamb producing sections of Kentucky can materially increase their profits if they will feed their lambs until they sell their lambs only as they are ready for market and hold back the unfinished ones until they are fat enough to command the topmost top prices. The general practice in selling lambs is to sell them off the market looks good and then ship the rest of the lambs as soon as they are fat enough to sell. This is a mistake because the lambs are not fed long enough to get the best prices. The lambs that are left behind usually weather the storm and sell for more money than the lambs that were sold first. Many farmers who followed this practice have an especial advantage because the corn crop of 1924 can be held until fall if necessary to feed them fall. Those lambs that did not trim their lambs will be forced to sell them on the early markets because if they are held until late weather the lambs are tasteless and go to pieces.

With the present system of co-operative markets and the accessibility to the principal markets with motor trucks there is no reason why farmers need not market their lambs at home. This would enable them to get only the best paying market. It would save paying freight, and commission charges and it would make a big difference in the actual income of sheep raising lamb producers. Instead of looking at the extra trouble and threatening the finish the farmer should handle his lambs the same way they do the other yards. Only those weighing from 75 to 85 pounds should be sent to market as these are the most desired by the packers. The light lambs can be held on pasture until they take on sufficient flesh and weight to command top prices.
