THE CARLISLE MERCURY

ESTABLISHED 1867

CARLISLE, NICHOLAS COUNTY, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, MAY 28, 1925

VOL. LVIII. NUMBER 22

CHILDREN SHOULD BE EXAMINED ONCE A YEAR

With Kentucky, this year the center of medical activities with the national conventions of insurance doctors, optometrists, dentists and surgeons meeting in Louisville, Dr. A. T. McCormack, State Health Officer calls on all residents of the State to perpetuate the principle laid down in the observance of May Day, each day in the year.

The inroads of the grim reaper have been materially reduced in the last quarter of a century and such strides have been made in the prevention of disease and the cure of ills in their incipiency that hope is held for doubling man's span of life within the next half century.

"Proclaiming May Day, Child Health Day, by the Governor of Kentucky and the President of the United States means that the government is beginning to recognize that children are the most valuable animals found in America. It means that the Government is going to devote time and energy, money and brains to the care of children.

"This movement began with the examination of school children. It was soon found that many of their defects had developed before school age. All their defects should have been vaccinated against smallpox while they were babies. They should be seen regularly by a well qualified doctor, so he will know that their diet is right and that they are developing normally.

"When we began examining the pre-school child, we found that lots of them were dying. Where they were still babies, from conditions that had developed in the mothers and mothers, their grandfathers and grandmothers, and, not only on Health Day, but every day, the State Board of Health wants to get before the people the importance of having a thorough examination once a year by your family physician so he will know how to advise you to avoid being sick—to keep on being well, so that you may be able to live longer, happier and more efficient lives."

"SUMMERLESS 1916" MAY BE DUPLICATED THIS YEAR

Unless scientific signs fails, says Lieut. Com. George R. Brandt, aide to the naval hydrographer at Washington, this summer will be a cold one and the summer of 1916 even colder.

A study of solar radiation and ocean temperatures has convinced him that the "summerless" 1916 may be duplicated next year.

Lieutenant Commander Brandt points out cyclonic disturbances are the unknown quality in the weather equation, and that while the present outlook is for a decided temperature drop, actual conditions at the time may be far different, because of factors that are now unknown.

He believes, however, ocean temperatures greatly influence the weather and the 1915-6-7 weather already has been largely determined by the heat of the sun stored up in the ocean during 1923-5-4, when solar radiation was below normal.

Any effort to forecast weather over a period of a year or two would seem nothing more than wild guessing, said Professor Henry J. Cox, district weather forecaster at Chicago, in commenting upon predictions by others the next two summers would be cold and 1926 might duplicate "summerless 1916."

"Maybe the next two summers will be cold or they may be hot," he said "It is a bit of blue guessation, and if the guesser hits it, he then can say 'I told you so.'"

NAVY RESUMES RECRUITING

The Navy Recruiting Office announces receipt of a despatch from the Navy Department directing the resumption of recruiting in the Kentucky District. The Navy's authorized complement of 86,000 men has since February 6, 1925, numbered 84,000 enlisted men. The departure of about 200 vessels of the United States Fleet on a six months cruise to Honolulu and Australia has, however, emptied the training stations at Great Lakes, Illinois, San Diego, California, and Hampton Roads, Virginia, and replacements are needed at these training stations.

The Kentucky district which includes the main station at Louisville and four sub-stations located at Lexington, Paducah, Evansville and New Albany has been placed on a quota of fifteen men per week. A long waiting list of applicants for enlistment in the Navy has been formed during the last two and one half months of idleness and those still desiring to carry out their original intention of enlisting may present themselves.

DO NOT EXPECT TOO MUCH OF COOPERATIVE MARKETING

There is an evident tendency on the part of some people to expect the impossible of cooperative marketing, according to O. B. Jesness, Chief, Section of Markets, Kentucky Experiment Station. He says that cooperation can assist farmers in many ways in bringing about better methods of marketing. Organization, however, possesses no magic power over prices. It does not make arbitrary price-fixing possible. Cooperative marketing must sell in accordance with market conditions. Its real purpose is to get the full market value of the product, not to fix prices on some artificial basis.

"It is well to remember," says Mr. Jesness, "that a marketing organization is the sales outlet for production. The marketing organization does not adjust the production of its members directly. Because of nonperishables, a temporary oversupply may be carried over by the association. However, this is not a solution for continuous overproduction. The members of a marketing association, therefore, should not expect their association to obtain profitable prices for them if more is produced than can be sold at such prices. It is still the individual members whose farms are the producing units. Acreage is determined by the members not by the association. In comparing a marketing association with a manufacturing concern, this distinction must be kept in mind. The factory produces the goods it sells. The marketing association sells goods produced by the individual farms. The factory can adjust its production to meet demand. The organization can aid them by supplying information, but the actual adjustment must be made by the grower."

Construction of a $1,000,000 hospital to house war veterans afflicted with nervous diseases is to start at 113,500,000, an increase of 8,500,000 over the 1919 census.

Statistics show that every third home in the United States is on a farm.

Approximately 175,000,000 toothpicks are daily manufactured in Maine from Maine hardwoods.

Unofficial figures place the population of the United States by July at 113,500,000, an increase of 8,500,000 over the 1919 census.

In Memoriam

The Boys Who Gave Their ALL For Us

Gone but not forgotten are the Heroes of the wars which were waged for and by this great country of ours, that we, as a nation, might survive throughout the ages to come. They gave unstintingly of their all, and it is only just and right that we bow our heads in silent tribute to them on this, our National Day of Memory. If you have no immediate relatives who made the supreme sacrifice, it is your opportunity to show your gratitude to those who did by decorating their last resting place in a fitting manner. Let us all join in a moment of silent tribute to the

TWO FRUIT FAILURES IN FIFTY-FIVE YEARS

The first 55 years were the hardest for Thomas Tyler, who has grown fruit for 55 years on the same farm in Prospect community in Jefferson county. Speaking at a recent meeting of the Jefferson County Fruit Growers' association, he said that his orchard had failed to produce paying crops twice in the more than half a century that he has been cultivating it. The first time was in 1875, or 50 years ago, and the second time in 1924.

"With his many years of experience, Mr. Tyler is able to give the best germination of fruit growers many valuable suggestions," said W. W. Magill, field agent in horticulture for the Kentucky College of Agriculture, who recently inspected the octogenarian's orchard. "He is one of the few men of his age who was able to change the old time system of growing fruit by leaving the trees alone, and was one of the first men in Jefferson county to spray.

"Apples have been the principal crop on the Tyler farm for many years. One of the causes of past-time today for Mr. Tyler is that of failing on an apple box after a tree grading fruit so that it will sell for the highest market value."

FARMERS REPORT MANY GRUB WORMS

Many requests for methods of controlling grub worms are being received at the Experiment Station at Lexington. Fears are expressed that they may damage the corn crop. The Station says that there is little that can be done to control the worms at this season of the year. It advises close cultivation as a possible measure of destroying the worms and thereby curbing their activities. The worms attack new sown stalks, and nothing has been found that would kill or repel them without doing injury to the corn. Sod ground is often heavily infested. Plowing and working such ground in the fall or winter is about the only way to eliminate worms.

URGES CARE IN THE DOSING OF LAMBS

Reports of losses as a result of treating lambs for worms has caused Prof. J. L. Hancock, head of the sheep work at the Experiment Station, to urge caution in dosing young lambs. Few lambs are infested this early in the season, he said. The stomach worm does its greatest damage during the hot summer months, and usually does not begin to cause trouble before June 1.

"If an occasional lamb does cough or has worms," Professor Hancher said, "it should be remembered that a lamb that is only two or three months old and weighs 40 to 50 pounds, is not strong enough to be given the full dose, which is recommended for a lamb weighing 75 to 85 pounds.

"For instance, while it is recommended that an 80-pound lamb be given an ounce and three-quarters of a 1 per cent solution of bluestone, a lamb weighing 40 pounds should not be given more than one ounce of the solution. There have been some losses this spring among 40-pound lambs, which were given two large doses.

"Most of the early lambs should be on the market before they are troubled at all with worms. It is the late lambs, those which go to market during the last part of June and in July and August, that need to be treated for worms."

Complete directions for treating lambs for worms are found in Extension Circular 156, published by the College.

GOOD RETURNS FROM SMALL HOME ORCHARD

Forty-nine apple trees yield the taxes, kept the children in school and provided money with which to buy most of the groceries at the store of C. B. Hilliard, Bullitt county farmer, last year, according to County Agent G. W. Rosenkjoles from this small home orchard sold for a total of $700, and in addition furnished fruit for home consumption. The trees are 23 years old. Mr. Hilliard's total orchard expense for the year was $21, spent for spray material.

"And yet farmers often are heard to declare that a small home orchard does not pay," Mr. Rosenkjoles said, in discussing his work to encourage home fruit production. "Even though one never sold a dollar's worth of fruit, a small home orchard pays, for it provides fruit for the family's use. Every Kentucky farm should have at least a half-acre in orchard."

Mr. Hilliard marketed his apples locally, selling them to neighbors and storekeepers. His interest in orcharding was roused five years ago when he attended a pruning and spraying demonstration in a near-by county.
