KENTUCKY WINTERS

NOT HARD ON BEES

Most beekeepers in this State leave the bees in the summer stands, and this can be safely done, provided the situation is such as completely exposed to cold winds, and some packing to put about the hives. Dr. H. Garman, in "Beekeeping for Beginners," published by the Agricultural Experiment Station at Lexington.

Commonly it is only necessary to leave a shallow super on the brood body, filling it with fine hay, cobber, or crumpled paper, and placing, of course, the metal top over this. When further protection is desired, a wooden outer cover may be used. Protection beneath the hive is not ordinarily provided necessary, though some experienced beekeepers insist that the hive should be covered in some fashion to prevent loss of heat.

The entrance of the hive should be contracted greatly as cold weather comes on, and generally during the winter no opening 1-2 inch wide by about 4 inches long should be left.

Persons interested in beekeeping should write to the Experiment Station for circular No. 35, "Beekeeping for Beginners."

Game Laws Are Being Violated

Many Hunters Killing Game Before Season Opens, Hunters Must Secure License

A number of farmers throughout the county have stated to Mercury that violations of the game laws are common in this county, especially in the last few days before the hunting season. A few hunters in the fields, it is said, indicates that at the next meeting of the circuit court.

The 1925 hunting season will be officially opened next Monday, the 9th day of November, and many hunters have already secured license and the clerk's office will probably be a busy place the remainder of the week.

No hunter should start out with his gun without first securing a hunting license or he may be subject to arrest and fine. Twelve days before the open season on quail and squirrels and 15 days before the open season on rabbits, no person is allowed to hunt with dogs, guns or any other means. Violators of the game laws are subject to a fine of $25 to $100 and imprisonment in the county jail for not less than 10 days nor more than 30 days.

IN BURLEY PRICES

The smaller burley tobacco crop should not be expected to result in higher prices, according to a report by G. B. Hudson, chief of the section of markets of the Kentucky State Department of Agriculture.

"It is well to bear in mind that prices depend on the relation between supply and demand," the report says, and large quantities may be carried over. Due to the Red Cross Seal campaign, Jesse Stuart, "The stocks on hand several years is in the neighborhood of 220 million pounds. Government reports on the consumption of tobacco according to type are not available. An estimate, however, may be obtained by calculating the drop in consumption that would be likely to be done by adding to the stocks on hand on December 1 of each year the estimated production for that year and subtracting from that total the stocks reported on October 1, the following year. The average disappearance of burley leaf during the past 5 years has been in excess of 220 million pounds. Government reports indicate that production of crops considerably above this figure, have been harvested in recent years, million pounds, that of 1922 was 275 million pounds. Production has not been excessive, and that is why such large stocks have been carried over.

"The prices obtained for burley tobacco in recent years evidently have been sufficiently profitable to stimulate the growing of this type. Obviously, the growing of more tobacco than the effect contributes to the production which the effect contributes to the production which the effect contributes to the production which
