SUMMER'S OLD AGE.

Dreariest and cheerlest of months, Summer's old age, the infancy of Autumn, comes October. These are not the sparkling hours of April. They fall from leaden skies, ceaselessly, dowarily, typifying the hopelessness of impending age. Like a wearied mother, Nature sees her children mature, grow forth, and be sad. All about her still are evidences of a youth glorious, a maturity magnificent, fecund, full. Yet in this season of her fulfillment, this month of the harvest moon, she seems to sense the approach of change, to brood rebelliously upon her vanished youth.

But one evening the sun slips like a blood red orange through slaty clouds and the night winds sweep the drooping mists away. Frost sparkles on the grass blades and seems from the roof tops under the rising sun. There is a clean, delicious tang in the air. In the stillness of dreaming woodlands a hickory nut rattles down suddenly; the persimmon flaunts its golden fruit, luscious morsel for the night-prowling possum. Here and there a maple flames, its vivid colors in bold relief against the green of sisters loath hasty to follow the season's mode. A yellow moon pours its golden light upon the pathways worn by pedded feet after night-hunting wildfolk and cheery fires steal and crackle upon the evening hearth.

Nature, like the wisest of her human children, has found the recompensing calm of that peace which comes with fulfillment, and over the artist supreme, the master of the serpentine, she shows us in the golden days of October, that despite its sadness, its lonely yearnings, while some old age may be happy, tranquil, beautiful in its serenity.

THE MOST UNKINDEST CUT.

To a county, which in its aesthetic progress has metamorphosed its "Frogtown" into Miranda and its "Hog Jaw" into a more euphonious Taylor's Store, comes a map-maker from the seats of the mighty at Frankfort, skilled in mapistry, no doubt, but with a hearty disdain of the art of orthography, and changes our Miranda into "Mirandy," our Jordan into "Jordan." In magnificent disregard of our Methodist brethren, he adds a consonant and slides a vowel in the name of the reverend founder of that sect and gives us Wesley Chapel as "Westly Ch." That he didn't attempt the spelling of "chapel" is an instance of the man's admirable restraint.

But, barring this instance, he gives full rein to the flight of his phonetic fancy. There they are, dotted over an otherwise excellent map, like blackheads on the forehead of adolescence—Jordan and Cassidy and Mirandy and Craion and Burkesville and Beerfoot (not so bad) and Westly Chapel and Mt. Carmal and Myer and Summerset and Isbmill! In parody Byronic let it be said:

The spelling's his'n, every line—
For Carlisle sake, reader, take it not for mine!

However, we wouldn't be too hard on the map-maker. He has his points. He is a plain, blunt spoken and spelt man, on "she was spoke" to him, no doubt. And they lay great stress on "sounding" in the schools these days—they "s-o-u-p-h-o-n-e" phonetically and sometimes fearfully and wonderfully. They've gotten away from the "in (in) com (com) pre (pre) hen (hen) si (si) bly (bill)" methods of the Victorians. They have cast it aside with the wasp waists and the puff sleeves, the trolley cars and the bustles. Who shall condemn them? If a youth hears the word, Miranda, "sounded" distinctly, "Mirandy," who shall blame him if he drop his "a" and chase down to the bottom of the alphabet for a "y"? He is spelling as "sounded" and not as "a." And if "Summerset" doesn't spell Somerset, what does it spell?

No, we wouldn't be hard on the map-maker, but to a county which has been progressing toward the beautiful in the renaming of its villages and which is constantly put to it to refute the slanders of some of our up-stage neighbors anent backwardness as regards taste, this as- enlliquially-pronounced orgy is the "most unkindest cut of all."

He should make us a better map, with spelling revised, or our prayers will never set him "across Jordan."

POLITICALLY SPEAKING.

To your hard-boiled Democrat, a Republican (politically speaking, of course) has little virtue or no resolution. Yet there is one characteristic of your true Republican that every Democratic might well adopt as his own, but which few of them ever do. That characteristic is party regularity. A "bolting Republican" is a rare bird. It is a word not to be found in the negro vocabulary of Republicanism. Upon the polling of Democrats they wink; in fact they have been known to endorse Democratic aspirants. By precept, be it said, never by example.

And the poor Dimmycrats "fall for it." They get all steamed up in the primaries; and when a party representative to their liking is not selected, many of them (sad to relate!) slip over into the opposing camp. The Republicans welcome them, give them the "glad hand;" they may sometimes stay them with dagons and comfort them with apples, but as for passing the "plums and the "grapes"—O, la! la! Your deserting Democrat soon himself becoming something neither fish, flesh nor fowl and often (pleasant to relate!) he slips back into the party of his party. How much better had he stayed there in the first place and followed the solid Republican doctrine of party regularity.

Government by one of two major political parties can not be the ideal method. It is, however, the best method we have been able to find in this country. And so long as that is true, The Mercury can see little excuse for either Democrat or Republican to refuse to abide by the decision of his primary or his convention. We are not particularly keen on politics, to our shame be it said, no doubt, but we do believe, that once chosen his party's choice a voter should support the nominees of that party. He should "play the game," or perhaps a better way of saying part in the preliminaries at any party.

In the election on November 3, failure of the Democrats to vote may cause the defeat of those members of the party having opposition. General Apathy is a doughty old veteran that has carried many a minority to victory. If you are a Democrat, stick to your colors; play the game!

POEMS THAT WE LIKE.

THE LOST MASTER

(Robert W. Service)

"And when I come to die," he said,
"I shall not lay me out in state,
Nor have your hearse at my back
Nor cause your men of speech orate.
My monument your gift shall be,
No column in the Hall of Fame;
But just this item in the news for me
"He played the game."

So when his glorious task was done
He was not of his fame too thought;
It was not of his battles won,
But of the pride with which he fought.
Out of his seat, his ringing laugh,
His trenchant scorn of praise or blame—
And as we greased his epitaph,
"He played the game."

And so we, too, in humbler ways
Went forth to fight the fight anew,
And heeding neither blame nor praise,
We held the course he set us true.
And we, too, find the fighting sweet;
And we, too, find for fighting's sake,
And though we go down in defeat,
And though our enemy hearts may break,
We will not do our Master shame:
We'll play the game, please God,
We'll play the game.

THE GIPSY TRAIL

(Kipling)

The white moth to the closing bine,
The bee to the opened clover,
And the gipsy blood to the gipsy blood
Ever the wide world over.

Ever the wide world over, last,
Ever the trail bold true,
Over the world and under the world,
And back at the last to you.

Out of the dark of the gorgio camp,
Out of the grime and the gray
(Morning waits at the end of the world),
Gipsy, come away!

The wild boar to the sun-dried swamp,
The red crane to her reed,
And the Romany lad
To the lot of a roving breed.

The pied snake to the rifted rock,
The buck to the stony plain,
Sweeping the sea-floors white,
And both to the road again.

Both to the road again, again!
Out on a clean sea-track—
Follow the cross of the Gipsy Trail
Over the world and back!

Follow the Romany patteran
North where the blue bergs sail,
And the lows are one with the frozen spray,
And the moons are shod with mail.

Follow the Romany patteran
Sheer to the Austral Light,
Where the bones of God in the Southern wild
Bleaching the sun-floors white.

Follow the Romany patteran
West to the sinking sun,
Till the junk-sails lift through the hummock drift,
And the east and the west are one.

Follow the Romany patteran
East where the dawn is spilled
By a purple wave on an opal beach
In the hush of the Malim woods.

"The wild hawk to the wind-swept sky,
The deer to the wholesome wold,
And the heart of a man to the heart of a maid—
As it was in the days of old."

The heart of a man to the heart of a maid—
Light of my tents, be fleet.
Hearting waits at the end of the world,
And the world is all at our feet!

HEALTH FOR PRESCHOOL CHILDREN

Child Health Talks by Dr. Pantelis Mdf. Jennings, Assistant Director, Bureau of Child Health, State Board of Health, Louisville, Ky.

Safeguarding the lives of 35,000,000 children in the United States is a task to which the nation is awakening. Many agencies are planning a begin early to strip and grade, as the city does persons with unusual care, according to Eric C. Vaughn, College of Agriculture field representative.

"The stripping room should be large, medium and small plants should be kept separate and stripped by themselves. Prescutions should be taken to keep grades from getting mixed in the bulk or on the wagon, and to deliver in the warehouse in the best possible order."

October subscriptions are due.

TAX PAYERS

Please call at office and list your property. The books must be closed November 1. List early and avoid the rush.

Thanking you,

EDUCATED CITIZENRY IS A NATION'S CHIEF ASSET

We are prone to take the world's greatest blessings for granted. Especially is this true in our considerations, or lack of, consideration, for our public schools.

American Education Week was planned for the purpose of directing the thought of the Nation to our schools. Any activity in appropriate for American Education Week will result in a better understanding of the public school as an integral element of progress in a democracy. All the activities of the week should emphasize and be kept around this central theme.

There are two view points from which we can consider the public schools—the materialistic and the other is the spiritual. Considered from either viewpoint, the public school is not an upheaval but a farsighted investment in national prosperity. Education brings to the present the wealth of knowledge of the past; furthermore, it has somehow as its very holestar, Money spent for education becomes a very effective force which yields personal profits to the individual and the community minds. Knowledge disseminated among the masses of the people is a nation's chief asset. It gives a much increased power to produce material goods and to live on a higher plane of material comfort. Increased power to earn, to save, to buy the comforts of life, and to acquire a higher rank in wealth among the nations of the world is by no means the chief outcome of our schools.

Increased power to think straight, to understand clearly, to judge and respect their viewpoints, to achieve wisely success in the materialistic, to secure higher ideals, to work individually and cooperatively in the public good—these are the intangible outcomes of the public school which are priceless. The immediate attainment for which teachers and citizens are striving everywhere is the ethical life of the community, state and American Education Week in 1925 bring larger vision to our teachers in their important work and a great appreciation on the part of the public as to what education means to the Nation!—Mary McKinnon, President National Education Association.

STORY OF JOHNNY APPLESEED

Everyone ought to know about Johnny Appleseed. You youngsters may never have heard of him, but it is a great shame that his story was familiar to your mothers and fathers.

Johnny Appleseed was the forerunner of the apple industry in the great Middle West valleys. Of course that wasn't his real name. He was born in Boston in 1775 and christened John Chapman. In 1801 he started out through the wilds of Ohio and Indiana sowing apple seeds wherever he went.

For 47 years he wandered up and down the country, always barefoot and often clad only in a coffee sack with holes for arms and legs. To him it was wicked to kill and graft pear trees or to destroy. In spite of his many peculiarities he was respected and welcomed by all. Before he died in 1847, the seeds he had sown had grown into bearing apple trees over an area of 100,000 square miles.

The late Rev. Dewell Dwight Hillis was so impressed by the events in Johnny Appleseed's life that he made a romance called "The Quest of John Chapman." (The Nursery News.

HUNTERS SHOULD WATCH SEASONS

The desire to enter the fields and the forests with a gun is effecting the lover of outdoor life at this particular season, and if he is not true and law-abiding, he may find himself venturing out before the open season that begins Nov. 15. Already many calls have come to the wardens and the office of the State Game and Fish Commission regarding them to make arrests. In fact, the vigilance of the sportsmen along this line was never so cooperative as now, assuring the Commission that the violators have a dim chance to hunt without arrest before the open season. All true sportsmen and landowners, who believe in a square deal should assist the wardens in apprehending all violators.

All hunters should secure their li cense at once, remembering that the Game and Fish Commission has no other source of revenue, and cannot stock the fields with quails and the water with fish without these funds; neither can the Commission give protection thru the warden forces without those license fees. Help to support a conservation law and see to it that your neighbor does likewise.
