DRIED FRUITS MAKE EMERGENCY DESSERT

When the supply of preserves runs low in the "off" fruit seasons, Miss Alma Brinnenschneider, specialist with the Home Economics Division of Iowa State College, recommends that the housewife make conserves from dried fruit.

A recipe for apricot conserve which Miss Brinnenschneider has found very successful requires 1 pound of dried apricots, 2 oranges, 2 cups of grated pineapple and sugar. The apricots should be soaked and then cooked until they are very tender. The grated pineapple and the oranges which have been sliced crosswise very thin should then be added.

Add an amount of sugar equal in volume to the fruit and cook the mixture until it gives the characteristic "jelly test." It may then be poured into glass containers, allowed to cool and covered with paraffin. Pears or apples may be substituted for the apricots in this recipe.

Another conserve which is found to be very delicious and easily made requires 1 pound of dried peaches, 2 lemons, 2 oranges, water and sugar. The oranges and peaches, which should be sliced very thin, should first be soaked in water for approximately twenty-four hours, then cooked until they are soft, after which they should be run through a coarse sieve.

The mixture should then be measured and about two-thirds as much sugar as there is volume of fruit added. After adding the sugar, cook until stiff, turn into containers and allow to cool. It can then be covered with paraffin.
