THE GARDEN

All day she planted gayly one by one
The shining seeds of her expectancy,
Her heart was like a garden in the sun
Thrilled with the loveliness of things to be.
In secret now, but oh, how soon to bloom,
In a seeth seemed notes of melody so strong
She scarcely heard, along the bough's perfume,
Birds trickling little dewy streams of song.
He reached the gate at twilight, and she heard
His steps like marching music on the walk.
Her garden waited; at its edge she stirred
And reached his hand, too full of words to talk.
But she has blamed him that so long he stood
Not comprehending—as a woman could.

Some of the horrors of the recent tornado which struck Poplar Bluff, Mo., and the fortunate escape from injury of Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Darnall and their son are described in a letter received by Mr. and Mrs. Sam K. Veach from their daughter, Mrs. Darnall. Mr. Darnall was in the passenger depot at Poplar Bluff when the tornado struck. The building was completely wrecked but Mr. Darnall escaped without a scratch. Mr. Darnall and one other man were on the lower floor and the other man was killed. The Darnall home was the first building outside of the path of the tornado and Mrs. Darnall was uninjured. Their son is in school and the school building was not in the path of the storm.

NO FIREARMS BY MAIL

Law Forbidding Transportation Of Weapons In Effect

On May 10 it became illegal to ship firearms through the United States mail. The law forbidding transportation of weapons was passed at the last session of congress.

Prohibiting firearms from being sent through the mail by mail order houses will go a long way toward disarming bandits, it is believed. Practically all states have already passed ordinances forbidding firearms to be sold except to responsible citizens. Most of the pistols secured by bandits, it is said, were from mail order houses.
