As Guthrie left the trade house to seek his room at Cameron's hospitable home he felt himself more favorable for the supper on which Mrs. Cameron would insist. The effort, he turned for a short stroll around the clearing. He was approaching the hillock when the fortunate appearance of a woman passed him at a short distance. The girl was a partial. The fur-ther in the food was turned from him but the swinging girdle of the moccasin feet aroused his curiosity. The white women residents of the post could be counted on the fingers of a hand. It was a stranger—a new missionary teacher at the orphan Indian school, doubtless! At the sound of his foot-fall, and Guthrie turned with a "good evening," as the woman in the fur cape came about-faced, to face with a furiously pounding heart, as he looked into the laughing eyes of Joan Quarrier.

"You! Here?" he exclaimed, gazing at the spotted hood as if at a ghost. "Welcome to Fort Resolution," she cried, extending a mittened hand. "I've just left Mrs. Cameron. She knew of your arrival with that fabulous load of furs." Congratulations on your defeat of Laughing McDonald."

"You—whittering at Albany," he continued, "and you never told me?" The color rose to the dark hair on her forehead. "I found a job. You see they needed a nurse terribly, at the school." Her eyes avoided his searching look now. "My brother returns in the spring, so I decided to wait for him here."

"But when I left, you were leaving in a day or two for Boston," he protestingly persisted. "And you wrote me Christmas letter and never told me you were coming here," he accusingly added reproachfully.

"I—I couldn't interfere with the—your fight for the fur trade," she replied weakly.

"Well, the fact is, Miss Joan Quarrier," he said with a laugh, "that you are here in Albany, and I'm at Albany, and I believe it's unanimous that I'm going to stay a day, or two, or three, and talk to you."

"I'm sure," she said with a low bow, "that you are most flattering. But Mrs. Cameron, my employer, Mr. Swan, does not approve of you, sir."

"All the worse for Swan, then. I'm going to see you tomorrow morning, afternoon, and evening. Swan or no Swan. I am a masterful man and will have my way. What time tonight do I knock on the door of the Reverend Swan?" With all his eyes Garth searched through the face which had come to him by the fire in the snow. The features were the features of Archibald, commandeered his dreams. The interior of her being here—to talk to—to look at, when he had thought her safe somewhere beyond! And why had she stayed on in the dreary north? Why had she not come to tonight? Joan's teeth flashed in an alluring smile. "I'll be there to reconcile Mr. Swan to the bitter blow of your presence. He needs the love, you know—finds my experience wanting."

Removing his mitten, with a quick movement Garth slipped off the mitten of the surprised girl and took her hand. "I'm glad you're here," he said, in words of such flight of fancy that he himself was astonished at his own eloquence. "I'm glad you're here, because I've been lonely since I left Albany."

Why had she stayed? Why had she stayed? he kept asking himself as he hurried to Cameron's house.

At supper at the Almoner Guthrie said: "I met an old friend on the clearing tonight."

The kindly eyes of the factor's wife grew quizzical as they met the glance of her guest. "She was here when Ethane came to the kitchen and told us of your success. What did you do to that girl last September? She said I have talked a lot about you this winter."

Guthrie's heart warmed to the information. He felt the blood in his face, but he strove to stay and help that effort of a man, Swan?"

Mrs. Cameron smiled. "They were dreadfully in need of some one was had training. Half the children had some ailment and Swan and his wife were at their wits' end. I suppose Joan couldn't resist the call, as her brother was to return to the bay in the spring."

"Did you meet him?" asked Garth. "Oh, yes, they ate here several time... Very important person—the doctor!"

"Ah-h!" This from Cameron.

"What's the matter," laughed Garth. "Didn't you like him?"

"Like him? It was all I could do to keep my hands off that rooster," growled the lord of Albany. "He made a formal protest in writing to the company to the effect that he had been insulted by you and that you refused to get his stuff on Akimiski, but I told him that Moose what I thought of him."

Garth was grateful to Cameron for his omission of other details of Quarrier's visit, which he knew Joan had scornfully demolished.

"Well, Miss Quarrier is not responsible for her brother. Could I have her over from the Mission tonight? I have missed kicked her out in September."

"Why, of course, Major Guthrie. I was going to ask you to," said Mrs. Cameron. "The poor child has a dreary enough time with the swans. They've been worrying about her ever since you know, because of her liberal views on religion."

After supper Garth hurried over the trail to the mission. At his knock the door was opened by the missionary.

If Garth Guthrie had been susceptible to withering looks from a reverend gentleman whose meager beard stiffened uncannily in the black cloth and clerical collar affected by the Swans, he would have been embarrassed at the chilly reception extended to him when he said:

"Good evening, Mr. Swan! I have come to take Miss Quarrier over to the Cameron's for supper this evening."

"You, sir," indignantly replied the missionary, "have put yourself beyond the pale—have no right to the society of pure women."

Hands on hips, for a spare Garth smiled good-naturedly down on the greatly excited Swan, struggling heroically with the part his conscience bade him play. Then he said quietly: "Swan, if you choose to harbour the scoundrel who which Carrier has filled your peanut brain, there is no law to prevent it. But Miss Quarrier has the opportunity to judge and she doesn't believe it. She is also her own mistress and capable of determining her own actions. She is going to the Cameron's with me now. Tell her I'm here!"

The last was spoken with such cold vehemence that Reverend Swan instinctively drew back, fearing bodily harm. But the little man was a brave born. "Miss Quarrier was placed under my protection by her brother. I shall not leave her."

"Oh, is that you, Mr. Guthrie?" called a feminine voice from where where in the building. "Just a minute—I'm putting on my coat."

"Miss Quarrier," announced the redeyed missionary, "knew that the situation was swiftly slipping from his control, "I forbid you walking to the Cameron's with this man."

"Oh, Mr. Swan! You can't be really serious," said Joan, appearing in a doorway. "Mrs. Cameron expects me and I'm sure my reputation is good enough to survive the walk there with Mr. Guthrie." She was talking as one coaxes a child, and Guthrie bit his lips in an attempt to stifle a laugh.

"Miss Quarrier, you know my wishes. If you choose to disregard them—"

"Mr. Guthrie is an educated gentleman," broke in Joan, "not a cave man. I will be home by ten o'clock.

Good night!" and crowding past the discomfited Swan, Joan Quarrier closed the door of the mission in his face.

"It is not difficult to tell who's commanding here," chuckled Guthrie. "I don't like to humiliate the little man. He means well enough but if you they will send weak men to work in this country, and the Oblates among ones, like your friend, Pere Rousseau the Indians will be lost to French. Mrs. Cameron tells me you've some wonders with the orphan Cree."

"Oh, yes! I've been useful to them —that's why he doesn't dare exert the authority which my honorable brother bestowed upon him. Imagine, nursing three years in France, and nasting Mr. Swan to guide her footsteps! Why, She laughed merrily, as they swung through the gate and up the path to the house.

The man beside her was hardly aware of his movement touching the bridle reins. Ten hard months were to be with the nearness of the girl whose lips were laughing at him, whose eyes defied analysis.

They didn't tell me this afternoon why you deserted me as to your whereabouts in your Christmas letter," he lamented.

"If I had told you, would you have come to see me?" she asked, turning her head and meeting his eyes with fresh, impersonal gaze.

"Yes!"

"That is the reason."

"You mean you didn't want to see me?"

"I mean that you had your work to do—It would have hindered you."

He walked for a space in silence, then turned to her with a question. "I kind-of a woman—you understand?" I hope not!"

He was thrilled by the thought that Joan Quarrier's friendship was like that which he had given to Archibald. It be that after the photographs she had seen of Hudson bay, and after sensitives, she had stayed nevertheless. All things were relative, after all, what? He could tell her now that he was free, that Alberta Pine had written him a letter which went out this afternoon by Moose Post, which told him that she had decided to abolish-take, and for the purpose to employ a stenographer, not intending exercise the $25,000 dollars ($25,000) sent to your hands to meet the same; and that he never said indebtedness, and Garth thought, was with the privilege to the city of redeemer by pay all of said bonds after five years from the date of their issuance.

This done pursuant to said order, dated at the court house door this 12th day of October, 1927.

Seek Treasure Trove in Bermuda Islands

A treasure hunt in waters in Bermuda by traditions of buried treasure which should be found. Several of the islands are said to have been used by the Spaniards in early times for hiding their surplus wealth, notably Ireland Island, now a British naval station; Cooper's Island, near the old town of St. George's, and Spanish Point, two miles from Hamilton. Accounts of golden crosses and pieces of eight having been found along the shore still exist in ancient records. On one of these islands a number of Spanish gold coins were discovered at a spot afterward called Dollar Rock. It is believed that in the early days of Atlantic navigation pirates often visited Bermuda as a landmark while on his third trip to North America and the West Indies to Spain by way of the Canary Islands. The discovery of many coral reefs off the Bermuda coast, many of which were originally wrecked, and now lie beneath the surface of the sea, has been confirmed in some instances it is possible that treasure was buried in the islands. Not many years ago an American visitor is said to have discovered a big gold coin on the beach, and after his departure for New York an enquiry agent still lives were found among the people living near by. Whether he really found a treasure hoard remains a mystery.

South Africa Native Strong for Courtesy

Business instinct is strong in the nature of the native of the Union of South Africa, as is indicated by a letter received by the conductor of a column of editorial comment in the Natal Mercury, published at Durban. The letter:

"Dear Madam—I would much pleased to let me know about your health. I am still in sound health, wishing you the same.

"Then Madam, I have one thing to tell you. I have bought nice six bons very fat, too. I would be pleased if Mrs. can let me know whether she would like me to send her those fowls, each is 3s. They are very cheap. Now They are ready and please let your friends know about this. If there is any house who would like me to send them fowls, I am gladly willing to send. Please send my best regards to you and your beloved may remain, your humbly servant."

Tried to Be Tactful

She dabbled in water colors and was rather proud of her work, and also her complexion was, at the same time, which was the envy of her friends and the object of many spiteful remarks.

At a dinner party on one occasion she sat next a shy, awkward young man who was trying very hard to think of something to say.

He took pity on him and tried to open conversation by remarking:

"I see you've been painting this afternoon."

"Yes," he stammered looking at her face intently, "but I really don't believe it."

Hayes Had No Frock Coat

When Rutherford B. Hayes was a college at Gambier, Ohio, Rutherford B. Hayes, later President of the United States, appeared as the class valedictorian in a hot coat with side pockets while all the other members of the class wore black swallow-tail coats.

Young Hayes did not show that he felt the need of better clothes and few of the students knew of his poverty. He had brushed into his oration. High thinking instead of high livings is no one. Lucretia Rudolph, Ohio historian, was the 'pale in the New England family transported to the West from which she sprang.

Cow's Long Journey

Dogs and cats often refuse to eat, imagine their friends' fare one owner to another, returning again and again to their old homes. How and then a cow will do the same thing.

Recently a farmer near Conway, in North Wales, sold his cow into Denbighshire. Next morning she was found in her old home, waiting to be milked.

She must have crossed Conway River, walked over Conway town, and leaped a four-foot wall to get there.

Open Sesame

Sesame is a word of three syllables, that is, the final letter "e" is sounded, as one of the tales of the "Arabian Nights"—Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves—knew. "Open Sesame" was the magic words which caused the cave door of the forty thieves to open by itself, their only fastening. Ali Baba knew the word, he cried, "Open wheat! Open rye! Open barley!" but the door obeyed no sound but "Open Sesame."

Listening in with his fingers on a special set he made for himself, a Rochester, N. Y., man can distinguish the various instruments in an orchestra, altho he has not been able to speak or hear since he was 6 years old.

LATE HOURS AND IRREGULAR MEALS

Good health is the greatest material blessing. It is capital to those who labor and prime essential to the rich. And yet, many make no attempt to keep fit, even though the causes of most cases of poor health are preventable.

Eating at irregular intervals, eating too fast, eating too highly seasoned food, frequent chilling of the stomach with iced drinks, and eating heavy meals while under nervous and mental strain all seem to be factors of indigestion and assimilation. Then the body fails to get the proper nourishment and the normal resistence toward disease is lowered, as is also the power of the body to make the amount of nervous and muscular energy.

Sleeping in fresh air during in the plan of nature to keep the body fit. It is a matter of common sense planned by nature to permit the human dynamo to rest and store up energy for the next run. Sleep should therefore be regular and undisturbed. At least six hours for adults and more for children out of each twenty-four. Though many of us use many of the hours that properly belong to the body for sleep to keep it fit is indulged in the numerous frivolous social diversions so common in the night life of our country, only a great crusade for better health, just such as the Good Health Campaign undertakes, can check it.

Constipation so common among women in offices, stores, schools, and most all branches of public work ranks high as an undermining agent.

There are a few of the most common though easily preventable causes for not keeping fit. Ask your family doctor how to avoid them and do so, then you will have accomplished much toward keeping yourself in proper physical condition.

Beethoven's Castle Broken

An interesting memento of Beethoven has been recently discovered in Baden near Vienna. It is a music-box, made in Switzerland, which was known announcing that the great composer once lived in the castle there at Allentrasse No. 9. This is a small one-story building erected in 1810 by the Polish scholar Oosthlenk, in the empire style of architecture. The building was being renovated when the tablet was uncovered. It will again be put in place.

FARMERS!

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

We hereby heartily endorse the Co-operative Plan of marketing our Kentucky Product, the Burley Tobacco Crop, and are of the opinion "Based from our business relationship," that the Tobacco Growers Association and their method of doing business, has proven itself of such merit as to justify any and all growers of Burley Tobacco in re-signing the new Pool Contract. We most heartily endorse the present management and the re-signing of the new contract, and the continuation of the present marketing system.

Remember your average for your 1920 Tobacco Crop which sold at auction over the loose leaf floors for an average less than 13c. net. Also your next crop, which was the 1926 crop, sold at auction over the loose leaf floors at an average of about 12c. gross. Your 5 crops, 1921 to 1925 inclusive, were marketed for you by the Burley Co-operative Association in an orderly and systematic way, for an average for the five years of 20c. This is good evidence for the re-signing of the new Burley Contract.

Let us re-sign and keep our business in our own hands.

It is a catch-vote plan; a borrowing from Peter to pay Paul. The tax-payer will pay for the free school books and the higher taxes.
