FEED TOO HIGH FOR NON—LAYERS

A plan for reviving the feed bill and at the same time getting practically as many eggs is suggested by Prof. L. W. Taylor, a poultry specialist at the Kentucky Experiment Station.

His plan is none other than to rigorously cull pullets about the time they are housed for the winter. In this manner he feeds fewer pullets but gets about the same number of eggs, for small, unthrifty birds lay no eggs but often eat as much or even more than vigorous laying pullets.

"A small, undersized pullet when put into the laying house stands no chance of profitably growing when in competition with husky, active and large birds," says Prof. Taylor. "All through the fall and winter she grows slowly, eating high-priced feed and giving no eggs. In the spring she likely will begin to lay about the time eggs are cheap. Such a bird returns no profit. Her eggs are cheap and her feed bill is expensive.

"A well-developed pullet is ready to lay by October. She lays well when egg prices are high and continues to lay throughout the spring and summer, if properly fed and housed. Her feed bill is expensive but her eggs are worth enough more to give a profit.

"By culling out small and sick birds and housing only strong, healthy ones, the egg yield will not be reduced much but the feed bill will be lowered. With feeds becoming higher priced, it will be necessary to select only the better stock, if profits are to be made."

Hardest Known Metals

Nickel, cobalt and manganese are the hardest metals found in the natural state. Alloys of steel, containing these metals, are harder than the unalloyed metal.

Cheer in Being Busy

Cheerfulness is the daughter of employment; and I have known a man come home in high spirits from a funeral, merely because he has had the management of it.—Bishop Horne.

Slowing Up?

Waste Poisons in the Blood Make One Tired and Inefficient.

Dizzy, through the day, restless and depressed? Feeling feel you all worn out?

Then you may be overtaxing your kidneys!

Sluggish kidneys allow waste poisons to remain in the blood and make one tired and tense, and with often nagging backache, drowsy headaches and dizziness. A common warning of sluggish kidney action is scanty or burning secretions. Assist the kidneys with Doan's Pills. Doan's have been used since 1888. Are recommended the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Right where you live

The Kentucky Utilities Company serves you best where you need it most—right where you live.

Food, clothing and shelter have always been the three most important items of living.

An electric range makes the cooking of food a cleaner, pleasanter, easier task.

The electric vacuum cleaner, the electric washer, the electric iron and the electric sewing machine take the back-breaking drudgery out of house work.

The electric light supplies a great convenience in your home—lends cheerfulness—warns off the night prowler.

Use electricity wherever and whenever you can. It will save your strength—help you to live better and enjoy life more.

Come to our local store and let us demonstrate the labor-saving electrical appliances.

KENTUCKY UTILITIES COMPANY
INCORPORATED

The average man's marital value is 96 cents, reports the National Dairy Council from some recent scientific research.

Chemically speaking the average man 5 feet 10 inches high, weighing 150 pounds, is made of the following substances:

Enough fat to make seven bars of soap.

Enough iron to make a nail of medium size.

Enough sugar to fill a shaker.

Enough lime to whitewash a chicken coop.

Enough phosphorus to make 2,200 match tips.

Enough magnesium for a dose of magnesia.

Enough potassium to explode a toy cannon.

Together with a little sulphur.

In eating three meals a day people should think in terms of sufficient fat, sugar and minerals to keep up these general proportions. Most important of all these are the minerals.

A recent bulletin of the state department of public health gives the necessary amount of minerals for each day's food supply as follows:

Whole milk—one pint for adults; one quart for children.

One egg.

One serving of meat, or fish, or dried beans or cheese.

One potato.

One large serving of a leafy vegetable.

One serving of whole grain bread or cereal.

A serving of fruit.

If you would keep your voice at the 98 cent market it would be wise to check up on your diet and see if it includes these mineral-containing foods.

MEN MAROONED

He Returned to Garth, Busy Cooking Supper.

Which Entranced them.

"Ah-hah! I fixed Etienne as he returned to Garth, busy cooking supper. "Old Sagi, he keep away; he not see Etienne Savanne." But, gratifying as was the news he had picked up among the gossiping hunters, Savanne knew the Indians, and, feared the night would bring forth a Forythe old wizard was past master in the art of playing on the superstitions of the Crees, and with his incantations and mumbo-jumbo would doubtless persuade them late starting at once for Seal cove.

But Etienne had no intention of getting Savanne's free hand. Secretly, he feared the cleft-skulled chief, and Scout from the tent-followed the admonitions of the efficient, he would break the old man as the shrieking Mc Donald, friend of Garth. If the latter had dared to start trouble, the night would be dangerous with the Crees in a highly excited excitement, but the arm of the company was long in hand heavy, and Etienne, Savanne's servant, feared as a fighter the length of the coast. So the prospect of trouble gave Etienne little concern, but the loss of twenty thousand dollars in fur, which the Crees had with them, would be little short of a calamity. On his return to his tent, his active mind groped for the best method of, that night, hanging the shaman with his own rope.

"Well, what did you hear?" asked Garth, "Did you see Saul?"

"No, he keep 'em' quiet." De Cree have much fur, and many of de men would go to McDonald, but de squaws have fear of devil. A folley by de name of Savagne, he tell de squaws down on de Piramigan some bad story, also up on de Rabbit, an' only make dem squaw 'ver' nervous." Etienne smiled at the success of his efforts. "That, was certainly a good bit of strategy, Etienne, but you say the men are now wabbling in favor of the schooner?"

"Ah-hah, I t'ink dat Scout, wid hees spirit, weel beat us tonight."

"We've got to think of something to do—we can't let him get away with all the fur in this camp, man!" urged Garth, handing his friend a heaping plate of beans and bacon.

As Etienne ate, his swarthy face was grave with the problem confronting him. What could be done? He even considered escorting himself to the medicine tent downstream, binding and gagging the old man as he entered, and playing shaman himself. But the danger of discovery by the outraged Crees would be too great. Failure would make matters even worse.

The medicine rite was to take place under the moon, which was late, so deep in council of war lingered white man and half-breed, until the silver disk rode above the white tundra already lit by lengthening stars. Then Etienne returned from a short reconnaissance to report the hunters and squaws already moving to the rendezvous downstream where a fire glowed in the spruce. Small and cylindrical in shape, its tanned caribou-hide walls painted in red and black with the shapes of animals, the sun, and grimacing faces of the spirit friends of the conjurer, the medicine lodge stood a short distance from the fire. Gathered in the warmth of the blazing logs, shawled women and hooded hunters, beats together, conversed in low tones.

Higher over the tundra above the valley, the moon, tewing through the spruce tops, was nearing the zenith. A night for magic, and as his curious Crees to a highly excited excitement, but the arm of the company was long in hand heavy, and Etienne, Savanne's servant, feared as a fighter the length of the coast. So the prospect of trouble gave Etienne little concern, but the loss of twenty thousand dollars in fur, which the Crees had with them, would be little short of a calamity. But the danger of discovery by the outraged Crees would be too great. Failure would make matters even worse.

"The old son-of-a-gun," chuckled Garth, "He went to that slip to throw them off the scent and keep them away from that end of the island. He gets a fifty job with the company for this night's work."

In an overawed, whispering group the Crees and their squaws returned to their tipis, where Gee-Gito the medicine was discussed the range of the spirit voices, which the great magician of the Ilkwan had invoked for the safety and guidance of his people.

In the privacy of their tent the two men, still dazed by their unhoped-for success of their mission to the island, gorged by the fire.

"Forty-six silvers and eighteen black, besides a lot of cross and patch, you say?" Garth repeated, elated with the trade that would come that Christmas to Ilkwan.

"Ah-hah! A War' twenty 'thousand dollar—de largest trade Ilkwan ever start-increase! heaven. It was a
