Look For The Red "O. K." Tag

After we have thoroughly reconditioned a used car, we attach a red "O. K." tag to the radiator cap.

This tag certifies that the vital units of the car have been gone over completely by expert mechanics and found put in condition to give thousands of miles of additional service. It takes all the "guess-work" out of used car buying.

Look for this tag when you buy a used car—for it is your guarantee of quality and value!

Only Buick has an engine Vibrationless beyond belief

BUICK'S remarkable freedom from vibration is due primarily to three wholly important factors. First—the inherent smoothness of the Buick Valve-in-Head six-cylinder engine. Second—rubber engine mountings, front and rear. And third—the scientific and almost perfect balance of the entire Buick crankshaft assembly.

Only Buick enjoys these advantages. And only Buick provides the silken performance—the unvarying smoothness at all speeds—the longer life and greater serviceability of an engine vibrationless beyond belief.

"MEN MAROONED"

"A home . . . a home!" repeated the other, moody eyes on the rope which he rubbed in his broad palm. "It doesn't mean anything to me, John."

"Yes, I know," and Skene looked pityingly at his chief. Then rising on deck straightened them in their chairs. A sailor thrust his head through the door of the cabin.

"There's an Injun here with some news."

"Send him down."

The Cree Interpreter entered the cabin, followed by a hunter whose face was alive with excitement, as he chattered to the Cree.

"What's on his mind, Michel?" demanded McDonald.

Shutting off with upraised hand the stream of Creeafrom the mouth of the Indian, the Interpreter replied: "Joe Mekomastees, dead!"

"What?" McDonald rasped. "Dead? How d'you mean? Killed?"

"Found dead on de Canoe Riviere, wit' bees crowd ripped out."

"Well, I'll be d—d! Who found him? This hunt?"

"No, he see some Cree crossin' ice at de Beeg point—hey toll him."

With a quick movement, McDonald reached and drew the Interpreter to him. "You say some of the Indians are crossing to the mainland?"

For a space the harsh phonetics of the Cree tongue filled the cabin.

"At Beeg point, yesterday, he say many dog-team from de neig' cross de ice. At Chene Riviere hunter say he fin' Mekomas dead in snow by riviere shore."

"But where's old Sour? Didn't he make his medicine on the Canoe?"

"Yes, he say Sour mak' beeg medicine two sleep back—all de hunter record of Island come."

"Good! Sour is bringing them down the coast."

But as the Interpreter continued to interrogate the Indian his eyes widened in surprise, which swiftly gave way to consternation. Turning excitedly, he cried, "Sour tell dem Cree dat de devil see de ship here! He scare dem crazee—tink dem all evair de ice to Elkwan!"

McDonald and Skene were on their feet. "What!" roared the free-trader. "He's taken them — to Elkwan? Blunsed, the white men sought each other's faces.

"Sour, he come here to find us," went on Michel. "He work all tam' for de Hudson's Bay."

"Whipsawed!" And McDonald's bull add limply into his chair.

"The old beggar! He fed it to us like a lot of schoolboys!" sputtered Skene, wagging his grizzled head. "He sure put it over in style."

"Played like a pair of fish!" McDonald suddenly straightened. "Skene, for two cents I'd cross the ice and get that fur. It's ours—they stole it."

Skene looked hard into the blue eyes of his chief. "First, we'll have a bandennie now. To get it, that man with the scar, and his half breed will fight; second, the police would be up here before we were out of the ice. Foolish talk!"

McDonald's twisted features relaxed. "You're right, John, right. It can't be done. We've got too much at stake."

Skene looked suggestively at his chief as he added: "We have—and you have."

The other shifted his gaze as he muttered, "Yes—that's only too true."

"But Mekomas? What'd you say happened to him?" Skene asked Michel.

"He was killed by de dog—knee t'rout tofe'."

"Killed by his own dogs—queer! Might have been wolves."

"No, de dog follow shoe tracks back to de trail. No wolf do dat."

"Well, so much for Mokomas! Small loss—never liked him."

"Does he know how much fur they had—those hunters who crossed?" asked the mate.

"They have mooch fur—bout one hunder skins."

"Half of it silver and black, probably. A small fortune! H—l!" In his chagrin Skene crashed his hard fist on the table.

"You're a judge of men, John. That fellow sure licked us," McDonald admitted ruefully. "Now we've got no time to lose with the southern hunters.—Michel?"

The Cree leaned to hear the whispered order of the free-trader. "Then keep this Indian on the boat—fill him up and lock him in, forward. If he got loose among the southern camps with this devil talk, they'd follow the others. Dressit ought to know, but the Lord knows where he is."

Shortly two dog-teams left the ship bound for the camps in the south half of the island in a mad rush to save the skins yet untracked.

* * * *

The Christmas mail from Albany was approaching on the river trail below Elkwan. From the upper Shiwan and the Shamattawa, from the Winisk and the Saft, for days the runners had dotted in to the post, dog harness gay with colored worsted and fluffy with bells. There old Scout, elated by his stratagem and proud of the praise which Garth had given unstintingly to the prowess of his tent, had led the Akimiski hunters with their valuable fur- to the trade-room, Garth no letter on the sled behind the rear Ungava huskies gallowing to it. Elkwan is the ultima of the Crees, made him set his finger nails in the palm of his hands.

"De Mail Ees Comin'," He Cried.

Apart his quarters, the little Christmas spruce walled on a table—for her letter—his Christmas. Should it wait in vain?

In the trade-room Garth opened the mail bag with nervous fingers. Clara's familiar hand, company mail from Cranston, two from Ethel, pale blues. He heard the hammering of his heart as he fumbled for, and drew out, the last envelope in the bag. One from an old army friend, another from his colonel, a third! Slowly he slid the folded paper from the one beneath—the last, as he doubtfully shook his head, numb with disappointment.

He looked! A straight hand—a woman's Here! She had kept her word to the exile.

In his Joy Garth sought the privacy of the room of the canniter to read Jean Quarrier's letter. Then he remembered. He had said it was to hang from the tree, to be read last, on Christmas day. Tucking it into the shirt beneath his coat, he put the others in a pocket and joined Etienne and the hungry dog-runner, who waited for Marie's dinner.

After all, it was to be a happy Christmas. A trade beyond his hopes; triumph over the schooners which lay thirty miles away over the ice—and word from the girl who fared confidentiously with those unwavering dark eyes. A Merry Christmas for Garth Guthrie, come what might from Clara Fiers—and Ethel. From Ethel, what?

On Christmas eve, he stood in his living room with old Anne, before the little spruce, brave with worsted and colored paper and bits of lighted candle. On the tree hung colored bags and at its feet were small parcels tied with gaudy Christmas ribbon. On the topmost thing was a letter.

"You told them, Anne?" he asked the grinning squaw, proud in her best wool dress, her raven hair coquettishly adorned by a bright ribbon—a gift of Garth's, cherished for ceremonies like the present.

"Ah-hah," chuckled the faithful One. "They come soon, now. Marie, she rub dem chil's face till dey shine lak de moon."

Garth paced the floor, his lean, dark face beaming in anticipation. Then laughter, giggles, shouts of children, followed by stern reproof in a man's voice, announced the arrival of the guests, the eight Bavennes.

Garth and Ethel simultaneously sprang to the door to welcome the comely Marie, leading her excited brood of six, with the grinning Etienne as rear guard.

GOOD WILL AND SALESMANSHIP

When the FAYETTE TOBACCO WAREHOUSE COMPANY was organized, its only platform was a square deal, and it sought the good will of Planters and Buyers who did business with it by following its interpretation of this platform

The United States Supreme Court has defined Good Will as "the disposition of a pleased customer to return to the place where he has been well treated."

Good Will is also the disposition of a customer to recommend satisfactory treatment to his neighbors and friends.

Good Will is undoubtably the most valuable asset that any business can possess. It can not be created by word of mouth, but only by putting into action a few old-fashioned principles of good faith, honesty, and the willingness to labor.

The Fayette's policy has always been to engage the services of the best men possible to grade, pack, weigh, auction and deliver tobacco consigned to it; to spare no effort or expense to sell tobacco for the high dollar on the open market; to have satisfied customers—Planters and Buyers alike.

Salesmanship is an art in any business, but salesmanship coupled with good will, accomplished for the Fayette Tobacco Warehouse Company the extraordinary record it made in the twelve years of its activities—1909-1921 inclusive—69,909,000 pounds of Burley Tobacco Sold—Good Crops and Bad—For The General Average of $22.11 Cash Per Hundred Pounds—The Highest Average Price Ever Paid Over a Term of Years By Any Farmers Selling Agency Since Tobacco Was Introduced into Kentucky.

If you want the high dollar at auction for your tobacco this winter, bring it to the
