"Sherry ——— sank, Mattie Jean! Years ago in Canada, my daughter was giggling and embarrassed children in the same house. Sherry Hall and Ann Savanne, friend of McDonald Hall Hall, he also with no relation."

With his audience rotated, Garth proceeded to divide the gifts he had ordered the previous week from Eaton's Canada. For each of the children was a $2 Bill, while the two girls were each presented with a $5 bill. Nothing had been forgotten, saintly evidenced by the number of good cigars he was doling the children in their stockings.

Then, with the children's noises were given out. There remained a dress each for Mattie Jean and Sherry Hall, and one for the disabled Dianne.

In the hands of the older class of Elkwan, the pleasure fighting the pleasure of Santa Claus, the latter presented gifts received mangled. Before the end of the evening, his own Christmas waited his eager eyes.

When Will Hall Bastle and chatter his friends returned to their cabin and old Anne left him, Garth sat down to read the letters from home. The first opened was his mother's letter, which was as follows:

"If I had been told that my own beautiful son Garth would deny himself or you have seen fit to do us know on the 25th, I should have taken him down the line who said it. Yet, you stated how you preferred to return home, your indifference to Christ and the business. Professor Guarnier has given me a full account of your story. A white woman would have been ashamed to do as you have done, Garth."

Garth's face was set hard as he read the first line. Slowly the color left his cheeks.

"Your mother and I have been sick with worry. Every day we have been expecting to hear from you. Your mother has been ill with worry. Your father has been sick with worry. Your sister has been sick with worry. Your brother has been sick with worry. Your mother and I have been sick with worry. Your mother and I have been sick with worry. Your mother and I have
