CANOPUS

When quacks with pills political would deal us,
When politics absorb the liveliest wit,
I like to think about the star Canopus
So far, so far away.

Greatest of vanished stars, they say
who list 'em.
But still it science always must despair
Its shell would hold our whole dinged solar system
Nor even leave 'twas there.

When Temporary Chairmen utter speeches,
And limited henchmen howl their battle hymns,
It's thoughts that out across the console reaches
To where Canopus swims.

When men are calling names and making faces,
And all the world's a jungle and a lair,
I meditate on inter stellar spaces
And smile a mild regard.

Far after one has had about a week of
The arguments of friends as well as foes,
A star that has no parallax to speak of Confuses to repose.
—By the late Bert Leston Taylor of the Chicago Tribune

In clearing off the grounds about the site of the monument at Blue Licks the Mercury trusts that it will be permissable to suggest that no trees be cut down, where it is possible to avoid doing so.

The beauty of a park is measured by the beauty of its trees and shrubs and growth that may be destroyed in an hour can not be replaced in a generation.

TRUTH AND POETRY

Ten happy boys, thrilling with the joy of a country vacation, gnashed a fen days' respite from the steaming brick and asphalt of the city streets, came Monday night to the creek bed and gave overlooking the Licking that is Camp Black Lick.

The Mercury wishes to thank the generous folk who have made possible the ten days of boyhood happiness. It reserves a flash in the innermost knuckle of most men and women.

The Mercury has lost occasion at various times in recent years of human appeals to the people of Nicholas county for food and clothing for the needs for a Christmas tree for those youngsters, to whom the season would otherwise have been but a mockery; for the entertainment of children from the crowded district of the city and for other charitable undertakings. We have learned that below the beat exists beneath many a mask of hardness, we have learned that help comes first and more frequently—not from those who pray the loudest, who are the most devoted observers of a ritualistic worship—but from- many whose piety is unbefurdened from the temple steps.

Twenty years ago, while waiting in a doctor's office, we memorized a framed motto. Sixteen years as editor of a newspaper, a habit of vantage from which sham and hypocrisy, vanity and buncombe are seen more plainly than from the viewpoint of any profession, unless it be that of the physician, has brought the realization that if ever poet wrote truth, Joaquin Miller did in that stanza:

In men whom men condemn as ill,
I find so much of goodness still;
In men whom men pronounce divine,
I find so much of sin and blot,
I hesitate to draw a line
Between the two, where God has not.

TYPHOID PREVENTION

More wells and cisterns are polluted by surface drainage in all parts of Kentucky, following the rains of this spring and summer, than ever before. Drinking of water thus polluted may cause typhoid fever, a dreadful and frequently fatal disease. Boiling sunkened water is the safe-guard, but the surest method of rendering yourself immune to this disease, is to have your physician administer the preventive vaccine.

Vaccination against typhoid renders one immune for approximately three years. During the World War its use stamped out this disease, a scourge that had caused more deaths than did bullets in previous wars. Its efficacy has been proven and except for a slight indisposition, which does not occur in every case, it causes no inconvenience to one in normal health.

FATHERS OF EMPIRE BUILDERS

Recently the editor of a trade publication, representing a corporation that serves thousands of country newspapers, wrote us for material regarding the Blue Lick Memorial. At the end of his letter, he said: "I am especially interested to this undertaking, as an amateur fought in that battle."

One wonders into how many States the blood lines of that little band of valiant pioneers extend. It is not difficult to envision the perpetuation of the dauntless daring of these pioneer Kentuckians through the hardy spirits of children and grandchildren, pushing ever westward to the founding of the magnificent empire that is our country.

Ill-advised, rash, lawless, perhaps the intrepid rush into the jaws of a trap, planned with Indian cunning and no little military skill, but typical, as was no other battle of frontier days, of the matchless courage, the hardihood and the intrepid spirit that went into the winning of the West. Fathers of empire-builders truly, this little band of pioneers, rushing dauntlessly to their deaths on the rocky ridge in the great loop of the Licking.

HOPE SEES A STAR

Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren -peaks of two eternities.

We strive in vain to look beyond the heights.

We cry aloud—and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry.

From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word.

But in the night of death Hope sees a star, and listening Love can hear the rustling of a wing.

He who sleeps here, when dying, mistook the approach of death for the return of health, whispered with his latest breath, "I am better now."

Let us believe, in spite of doubts and fears, that these dead words are true of all the countless dead.
—Robert G. Ingersoll, at his brother's grave, June 2, 1879.

"What's the idea of the Jonesh high-hatting us like that?"

"Haven't you heard? Their car has been equipped with snubbers!"

FATE

(Susan Marr Spaulding)

Two shall be born, the whole wide world apart,
And speak in different tongues, and have ab thought.
Each of the other's being; and have no heed.
And these, o'er unknown seas to unknown lands
Shall cross, escaping wreck; defying death;
And, all unconsciously, shape every act to this one end
That, one day, out of darkness, they shall meet
And read life's meaning in each other's eyes.

And two shall walk some narrow way of life
So nearly side by side, that, should one turn
Ever so little space, to right or left,
Their hands would stand acknowledged, face to face.
And rest with wistful eyes that never meet.

Calling in vain to ears that never hear,
They seek each other all their weary days
And die unsatisfied—and that is fate.

FOR A' THAT AND A' THAT

(Robert Burns)

Is there for honesty poverty
Who hangs his head, and a' that?
The coward slave, we pass him by,
We dare be poor for a' that.
For a' that, and a' that,
Our toil's obscure, and a' that,
The rank is but the guinea stamp—
The man's the gowd for a' that.

What though on homely fare we dine,
Wear hoddin gray, and a' that?
Gie fools their silks, and knaves their wine—
A man's a man for a' that.
For a' that, and a' that,
Their tinsel show, and a' that;
The honest man, though ever sae poor,
Is king o' men for a' that.

Ye see yon birkie ca'd a lord,
Wha struts, and stares, and a' that—
Though hundreds worship at his word,
He's but a coof for a' that;
For a' that, and a' that,
His ribband, star, and a' that;
The man of independent mind,
He looks and laughs at a' that.

A prince can mak a belted knight,
A marquis duke, and a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might,
Guid faith, he mauna fa' that!
For a' that, and a' that,
Their dignities, and a' that,
The pith o' sense and pride o' worth,
Are higher ranks than a' that.

Then let us pray that come it may—
As come it will for a' that—
That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth
May bear the gree, and a' that.
For a' that, and a' that,
It's coming yet, for a' that—
When man to man, the warld o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that!

BILL'S IN TROUBLE

—James Barton Adams

I've got a letter, parson, from my son
Bill, in the West,
An' my ol' heart is heavy as an anvil
in my breast.
I think the boy whose future I had once so nicely planned,
Should wander from the path of right and come to such an end.
I'd let him when he left us, only three short years ago,
But I limself a-plowin' in a mighty crooked row.
He's missed his father's counsel and his mother's prayers, too;
But he said the farm was hateful and he guessed he'd have to go.
I know there's big temptations for a youngster in the West,
But I believed our Billy had the courage to resist,
An' when he left I warned him of the ever waitin' snares
That lie like hidden serpents in life's pathway everywheres;
But Bill he promised faithful to be careful, an' allowed
That he would build up a reputation that would make us humble proud,
But it seems as how my counsel sort o' faded from his mind,
And now he's got in trouble of the very wurstest kind.

His letters came so seldom that I sometimes sort o' fretted
That Billy was a trampin' on a mighty rocky road,
But ever once imagined he would bow my head in shame,
And in the dust'd waller his old daddy's honored name.
He writes from out in Denver, and the story's mighty short;
I just can't tell his mother!—It'll crush her poor ol' heart!

An' so I reckoned, parson, you might break the news to her—
Bill's in the Legislatur', but he doesn't say what for!

GRIEF AND JOY

(Frederic Lawrence Knowles)

I sat with my sorrow,
Only one for a sigh;
I wept by Youth's new marry,
One by one we die.

Joy is a partnership,
Grief weeps alone;
Mary guests had Cana,
Gethsemane had one.

"Have you heard the news? I'm going to marry Freddy Van Dyke."

"But I thought you already had a husband."

DO THE THING FOR WHICH YOU ARE BEST SUITED

(By H W. Birge, President American Society for Thrift.)

While not reducible to statistical form, one of the most prolific sources of waste is misapplied human effort.

Countless persons are not living up to their possibilities because they are not doing the things to which they are best suited. Many absolute failures in life may be attributed directly to this cause.

It is well worth while to make a careful and honest study of one's personal talents and then direct one's course of life accordingly. To make a vocation of the things for which one is not fitted, is a type of thriftlessness which evolves waste of time, energy, opportunity and substantially every other personal resource.

We are each created with certain abilities—certain gifts of mind and heart—certain possibilities of progress. If we adjust our plan of life so that we shall be devoting our energies to the form of activity for which we are suited, we cannot fail to achieve success, provided we have the gift of health and live sensibly.

Instances are by no means uncommon where men and women have served carefully, only to have their years of faithful service rewarded with business practices or injudicious investment. The same may be said of those whose work has been of a routine character.

Neither hard work nor careful economy has been sufficient guarantee of security of thrift. The dollar saved from the earnings of a life of toil is not always the right way. The days, months and years must be invested not only industriously but with efficient industry.

Study yourself carefully—courageously, but neither pessimistically nor warp your judgment. After you have made a fair appraisal of your qualifications, shape the course of your life to these ends. To do so is to emulate real thrift.

EDUCATING FUTURE STOCKMEN

Under the above heading, The Lexington Leader recently published the following editorial:

The University of Kentucky announces that 400 farm boys and girls are attending 4-H boys' and girls' short courses. This feature of Junior Agricultural clubs work is conducted by the extension division of the College of Agriculture in cooperation with the Bourbon Stock Yards at Louisville, where the calves will be exhibited and sold at auction.

Baby beef clubs give boys and girls practical experience in buying, feeding, feeding, showing and marketing farm animals. They learn what well bred calves are, how to feed and care for them properly, and what makes a profitable animal. Instruction is given in field men from the college, the juniors are taught the best known methods in producing fat cattle. They are required to keep accurate records of their feeds, gains, profits, etc. They thus become acquainted with system, a thing long needed on farms.

But the influence of the work does not stop with the girls and boys. It affects the parents and the neighbors who inspect the steers at the fairs and compete with them at the annual sales and shows. They, too, learn that good breeding and care pay better than extra gains and higher prices.

Increased interest in livestock is attested by several hundred boys and girls and parents, and by the large number of education in stock judging, showing and fitting.

Farm boys and girls 10 to 18 years old are eligible to join a calf club. They must have the consent of parents or high-grade calves weighing 350 to 500 pounds when placed on feed. The methods employed turn out highly desirable animals for market, and the interest and return good profits. In fact, many boys and girls have made club work pay their college expenses.

SUMMER FEEDING OF HENS PROFITABLE

It is an important to feed hens properly during the summer months as well as winter, points out J. B. Smyth, of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Egg prices are rising and will probably continue to do so until winter; so feed used now should give good returns.

Summer feeding should be done along with close culling, as there is no profit in feeding cull hens. The flock should be culled every month until fall and all hens removed that have stopped laying and started to molt. The better laying hens will continue to lay through July, August and September or even longer.

Any good commercial egg mash or a homemade mixture will be satisfactory to use. A good homemade mash can be made as follows: 150 pounds of middlings, 100 pounds of ground yellow corn, 150 pounds of bran, 100 pounds meat scrap or tankage (60 percent protein) and 3 pounds of salt. The mash should be kept before the hens at all times and grain fed once or twice daily. The hens should eat more than grain during the hot weather. Eight to ten pounds of grain per day should be fed to 100 hens; allowing them to have all the mash they will eat. Oyster shells or ground limestone and clean fresh water should be supplied at all times.

Lack of exercise that has been properly fed and cared for should be prevented by scratch feeding. Where production falls below this, it is time to cull. This production should continue during July and August and probably longer.

TO THE REPUBLICAN VOTERS OF NICHOLAS COUNTY

Owing to the fact that I am attempting to visit every county in the district in my race for the Republican nomination for Congress, it will be impossible for me to make an active canvass of my home county. Nevertheless I am depending upon the loyalty of my good friends in old Nicholas to give me a splendid majority.

I have four opponents in this race and my chances for victory may depend, in a large measure, upon the majority I receive in my home county. Don't let the hot weather or lack of interest prevent your voting for a Republican for Congress next August 4th.

Thanking you one and all for anything you may be able to do to bring out a full vote, I am

Respectfully yours,
ELVA R. KENDALL.

IN MEMORY

Of Horace T. Barbee.

One by one our friends depart, and who can say
Which call will be the next?
Tears fall and sorrow rends our heart
And bows our head with grief oppressed.

Another voice is hushed and still,
Another hand lies folded o'er
A manly heart has ceased to thrill
And we shall see his face no more.

Kneeling him as we did and that he always chose to walk in the sunshine of life, we can understand what must have been his hopes in Heaven's eternity's veil was forever blotting out the sorrows of earth and the pain of life and daughter watched and waited
