CHAPTER XI

While I was in the boat... I saw a man in a white shirt...

There, I found the man... I saw a man in a white shirt...

He was looking at me... I saw a man in a white shirt...

It was a long, long way... I saw a man in a white shirt...

And then the woman smiled... I saw a man in a white shirt...

I saw a man in a white shirt... I saw a man in a white shirt...

He was looking at me... I saw a man in a white shirt...

It was a long, long way... I saw a man in a white shirt...

And then the woman smiled... I saw a man in a white shirt...

WHICH PICTURE SHALL IT BE IN 1928? A tulle engraver, as is the custom of cartoonists, who would drive home their point. But, in a manner of speaking, it is no exaggeration after all. The life that a tobacco market would bring to Carlisle is known to man, woman and child. The deadly dullness that settles down upon a town that is the center of a tobacco-raising community, when the market goes elsewhere, is easily imagined.
