A LITTLE TALK ON THRIFT

(By S. W. Straus, President American Society for Thrift)

Buying a home on the installment plan, when the terms and conditions are equable, is an excellent way of practicing thrift.

One concrete example may be given, which is typical of thousands of cases throughout the United States. A young married man who earned his living by keeping books for a number of individuals and small business concerns, was making about $250 a month. This was just enough to meet his current expenses. He did not find himself able to lay by anything for an emergency and the outlook for bettering his conditions in life was dark.

A business man for whom he did work persuaded him to buy a home on the installment plan. He was able to find one for $15,000 that was suited to the needs of his family in the city of 15,000 where he resided. Owing to the fact that he was a young man of sound character and industrious habits, he was able to secure the necessary backing and purchase his home on a contract calling for monthly payments of $140.

This constituted quite a burden to him, considering his income, but in three years he has built up a substantial equity in dwelling to which his property has increased in value at least $1,000. Meanwhile, his income has increased about $150 a month. More and more of his monthly payments are of course, going into equity so that he is now rapidly getting ahead, where three years ago he was, financially speaking in a treadmill.

It is perhaps not always possible for a family without considerable and of limited income to make such an arrangement, although one doubts if any young man of good sense could not find within his community those who are willing to assist him in such a worthy venture.

It is unfortunate that in the development of thrift in this country, the process of saving money and putting it in a savings bank has been emphasized to the exclusion of other worthy methods of getting a start in the practice of thrift. More encouragement should be given to home owning on the installment plan.

DRY FACTS

(Published by W. C. T. U.)

Victory Day, January 16, 1928 is the eighteenth anniversary of National Constitutional Prohibition.

Let the American people ask themselves these eight questions on this anniversary day:

1. Do I observe the letter and spirit of the law?

2. Am I helping to finance the bootlegger by purchasing his liquors?

3. Am I keeping alive drinking customs by serving or partaking of intoxicating liquors in public or private?

4. Am I saying a good word for prohibition whenever I get a chance to tell of its benefits?

5. Am I giving moral support to prohibition officers in the performance of their duties?

6. Am I supporting dry candidates for office, and refusing to support the candidates of my party when by personal example and personal activities they oppose prohibition?

7. Am I informed on the question through reading a temperance paper which tells about the real accomplishments of prohibition?

8. Do I belong to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union or some other organization with similar aims and by my influence, my association with other temperance workers, and my gifts of time help to promote law observance and law enforcement?

Let us answers these questions and then humbly and reverently accept our share of responsibility.

—Ella A. Boole

The best proof that we are right in saying this is the endorsement the people of the county have given the car --not in empty words but in signed orders, the like of which we have never experienced in our twelve years in the business. Come in and let us show you.

THE OLD YEAR

(Mary Charlotte Billings)

The bells are ringing for New Years,

The Old Year's race is run;

Hark to the clang of their iron tongues—

Another year is done.

Another year gone forever,

Did we use it well? Can we say That we filled brimful of love and work

Every beautiful, heaven-sent day?

Or did we clutter with wordy plans, Our year from day to day,

And loudly talk of the good we'd do

If the chance should come our way?

An old year gone forever,

And a new year just begun,

Oh, that the one may never know

How we treated the other one!

MAKE CONSERVATIVE INVENTORY VALUES

In taking the farm inventory, the estate should be valued at a conservative sale price, suggests the department of farm economics of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, which is urging farmers to make an annual inventory the first of the year.

It is more difficult to value buildings. Some may have been built when prices were high; others when material and labor were cheap. The department gives the following rule for determining a conservative value for buildings:

"The value of a building may be determined by estimating the replacement value of a building that is required by the farm business to render the same service as the present building is rendering, then depreciate this on the basis of the number of years it has been used and the number of years it is estimated it will last. This can best be illustrated by an example.

"A barn built 10 years ago at a cost of $2,500 will last 40 more years. The estimated replacement value of a barn that is required to render the same service that is now being rendered is $1,500. Disregard the original cost, multiply the estimated replacement cost ($1,500) by 40 (the remaining years of service) and divide by 50, (the total years of service.) The present value of the barn would be $1,500 times 40 divided by 50 or $1,200.

"In valuing machinery, all old machinery should be valued at the cost price is known should be depreciated on the basis of the number of years it has been used and the number of years it is estimated it will last.

"In valuing machinery, all old machinery should be valued at the price one would normally expect to receive or pay at a well attended auction sale. New machinery where it has been used and the number
