A DRY DEMOCRAT ON GOVERNOR SMITH

shall have a mighty fine opportunity to prove in the election of Governor Smith that we believe honestly that no religious connection shall be a barrier to seeking and holding the great office of President of the United States. I hate with all my soul religious intolerance and persecution, whether it be toward the Catholic Church or whether it exists among the many divisions of the Protestants. I believe that no man's religion should be interfered with or discriminated against by the Government of the United States, if we shall not forfeit those liberties which are fundamental in the Bill of Rights of the Constitution.

I have after most serious thought and after having heard every word of the proceedings of the Democratic convention decided to give my support as one Democrat to Governor Smith, whom I regard as one of the outstanding Democrats of the country and far and away the best man that could have been named by the Democratic party.

It is going to be a great fight and two men of equal ability and with fine records of achievements and accomplishment in worthwhile things back of both will be the contestants in this most thrilling battle that we have had in many a year.

I would not influence anybody's vote; I simply speak for myself and declare that as a result of prayerful thought and believing that the best interests of this Nation will be served by the Democratic party, I am heart and soul for the man who has been chosen as the Democratic standard-bearer. E. L. Powell

Chain That Rattles

Howard P. Seese, forest ranger in the Sproul state forest in Pennsylvania, possesses a chain more than seven feet long made from the rattles of the snakes he has killed during patrol duty. Seese says that a rattler's age cannot be told by the number of rattles, as from two to four may be gained in a single year.

Blindness Spread by Flies

The prevalence of blindness in Egypt is probably traceable to the fact that the fly is sacred in that country. It is said that a mother will not kill a fly nor even brush it from the eyelid of her child. Infection is often carried from one child to another, and in the case of diseased eyes the malady is spread in this manner.

An Example for Reba

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

THE three girls were sitting in Reba's room, discussing Helen Hathaway, who had been one of their class.

"Helen was such a social event here," Betty was saying, "that it seems terrible to think of her being married in a sanitarium now longing to be back here."

She wasn't rebuked for a single pension, but she noted Ernest Bailey.

"Not one," declared Kitty. "And she was three times spoilt than any girl I know."

Reba had listened rather than talked. Secretly she envied Helen. Helen Hathaway's happiness was more than a mere social affair with Reba soon. She had been Nora's closest friend and she was keenly interested in the love affair and wedding of Helen's life.

Reba's room was really Helen Malcolm's rather than Hathaway's now. She had moved in there after Nora's marriage.

But Reba was really interested in Helen's happiness. She was a fine and talented girl. "It's not enough of honour cannot be paid."

"Not even a presidential sum, my dear," Kitty had said, "Bella hardly."
