DRIVING HOME FACTS

Beginning with a single tobacco warehouse in 1912 and the sale of three million pounds of tobacco, the Carlisle Loose Leaf Market reached a peak of more than nine million pounds sold at auction...

All of us remember the hum and bustle of the old town, when the "market opened"—the streets lined with loaded wagons; the singsong of the auctioneer, the daily crowds in town, the fat checks going to bank...

And Now!

Last year the streets were empty. Last year the tobacco trucks rolled through town without stopping. Last year the warehouses were cold and dark and a modern redrying plant languished with a fireless boiler...

What of 1929?

What are we doing toward a market in 1929? We have the warehouses; we have a redryer; we have an enormous storage house and a location that is the logical center of a "RIM MARKET," too far away from the big market, except under the most ideal hauling conditions...
