BARTERVILLE

The Ellisville correspondent was correct in a statement last week that the village is not deserted, but it is not an important place. In our recent historical mention of the place, we had reference, only, to the time when she lost her glory as the seat of government of Nicholas county, and not the present time.

Located not far from "Forest Retreat,"

She's a blue grass hamlet, hard to beat.

Our people surely live in a slippery age. We slip out of bed mornings, slip on a clean pillow slip, slip down to breakfast, slip out at the front door, slip on a banana peel, slip down to old Carlisle, tell everybody all we know, or think we know, about politics and men and measures, slip into vote an election booth on election day, and vote our sentiments.

The berry crop of Nicholas is ripening very fast; and judging from the prospects, it may excel the past. Soon the luscious berries will be looking very fine; in hanging pendulous bunches, some drooma on a vine. Then all our near-by counties, in village and in town, will buy these splendid berries, of Nicholas renown. This blackberry county, has surely stood the test; in producing juicy berries, and excelling all the rest.

Mrs. Topsy Bowe and two children are spending this week with her mother, Mrs. George Donahue.

Mrs. Bettie Donahue, who fell and broke her arm, is getting along nicely.

Mr. and Mrs. Everett Broderick had as their Sunday guests J. B. Ritchie and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Newton Ritchie and Mrs. John Bowe.

Aaron Greene, wife and mother motored to Maysville Sunday.

John Broderick and wife spent one day the past week with Otis Broderick and wife.

Eli Fryman is seriously ill.

T. C. Asbury and wife motored to Paris one day the past week.

Miles Hollay spent the week end with Lon Feeback and family.

CHAPTER IX

Life, as everybody has known for a long time, is just one darn thing after another. But sometimes it really comes on if it were a whole bunch of darn things, one on top of another it certainly did this time.

I slept like a log after I once got to sleep, but I woke up early to a brand new set of troubles.

Josephine was still sleeping and so I was spared the need to be doing that soon. I didn't mind. I wanted nothing to do with Josephine as I could. I slipped into my clothes and hurried downstairs and out to the barn and straight to the stove where Jone Adkins and I had made the two gluers to be right before I went to bed to see whether they had left any material on top of their pots. I remembered they had slighted the stove where they had put the glue, and the fire from the white efficiency had shone down upon them.

From a distance everything looked quite as it had the last time I had noticed it, except for the glue pots. I noticed something white on the ground, and on the glue pots quite close I saw it was a bunch of Easter lilies that Jone and I had overlooked. I remembered then that the women of the night before had taken off a bouquet at her breast and that I had seen Jone when the man bumped her. The lilies must have fallen to the ground beneath a good hard solid foot—not a ghostly one. Then I must have hooked on into the tree and though I did not see any ghosts there, I did see that the bark was ripped and the tree had more or less broken. Somebody, or somebodies, had come up there—some thing real, not a ghost.

Then I went up to the house and investigated the bathroom. I found no signs of ghostly presence, but I did find something else. The bath tub had not been there when I left the house the night before. Jone and I didn't know just what those things meant but I did know that they didn't mean ghosts. I refused to believe in ghosts that walked—or danced—a cloth line. It followed that somebody had been using my house and grounds without permission. Of course my first idea was that Perkins had been having in lots of village people for a dance or he had it could explain a lot of things—why it was so anxious to prevent Jone and me from staying at Dinsmore that night, for instance.

But Mr. Perkins thought of a lot more I saw that this explanation wouldn't do. Perkins wasn't a dancing man, for one thing, and couldn't believe that he had ever been a dancing man. And it also was hard to at any rate he hadn't been for a good many years. And he didn't look as if he had enough of the milk of human kindness in his make-up to lend him take an altruistic pleasure in other folks dancing. Of course he might have rented the house to somebody who wanted to have a dance in it. But there was a lot more evidence. But on consideration I couldn't believe that, either. Nobody seemed dying to go through with such a thing with the owner in the house up-stairs and that they didn't know that the owner was in the house, no crowd of dancers would ever venture a minute when the owner turned up. It simply couldn't be done.

Besides, Mr. Braxton was in it—in the ghost thing. He interested me, nor brush of mustached lips could alter that fact. I made up my mind then and there that he would have to tell me all about it very humbly before I would forgive him. I resolved, too, not to question him, but to let him tell me. I believed it all a dream. At least, I would do this for one night, I would for this night cease I would lay for those ghosts. If they ventured into the house again I would see for it that they didn't get away without explaining who they were. Having quite made up my mind to this I left the ballroom and started down the hall in order to wake Josephine and Mrs. Janors.

I did not need to wake them, however. They were both up and fully dressed and ready to come down. I suppose they have been prowling about for a good deal longer than I had supposed. At any rate, Mrs. Janors explained my seeing the clang of a breakfast gong downstairs. She told me that she had gotten some sort of breakfast ready for us.

At the foot of the stairs we met Perkins. When he saw me he shrank a little, but he managed to fix me with his questions. But I didn't. I merely said him to ask Mr. Braxton. If he felt able to join us at breakfast or whether we should send him some thing.

While we waited we mapped out a course of action. That is, I mapped it out, and the others promised to follow it. I wanted to keep absolutely quiet about those "ghosts," to ask no questions either of Mr. Braxton or of Perkins and to let them think I was persuaded that all I had seen was a dream. Josephine and Mrs. Janors did not like this plan. They wanted to question both Mr. Braxton and Perkins and to threaten them with arrest if they refused to talk. They both became convinced that something secret was going on in the house and they wanted to take the direct way of stopping it.

I didn't. I didn't want to threaten Mr. Braxton. I owed him too much and he was my guest, besides. I wanted to punish him but I wanted to punish him as for Perkins—well, Perkins was small fry.

"Don't say a word today," I begged "Tomorrow, perhaps, we'll be ready to say a lot, But today I want to keep quiet. I feel it in my bones that those make-believe spooks are going to walk again tonight; and if they do I want to catch them red handed. I'm willing to call it fixed as a guard, but I'm not willing to scare them away by letting Perkins know that we suspect anything. See?"

They saw; or, at least, they were silenced for the moment. Probably they couldn't have been silenced for long. But at that moment Perkins came back with a note that he had found on Mr. Braxton's table

Perkins blinked. "Mr. Braxton gone away, sir. He left this note for you a letter for you."

"Gone?" I knew I lost my voice "Gone where?" I drew the note eplch."

With a sudden ing downcast Perkins extracted the note and handed it over. I drew back when I saw how pale he said. "I guess my him gone. He left the door in his room."

I had the note open by this time It was short

"My dear Miss Ellith:" It ran "I am going away with the Scotts who have just come in. I am going away against my will but the doctor insist that I must have rest and a change of facts. If I possibly can, and explain some things that must have perplexed you.

"I trust you will add that I am very sorry you should have been frightened last night. I am hoping this note reaches you in time to put at this hour of the day. Will you please tell Perkins that I will be glad if I am to let for her hospitality?

"Sincerely yours,

"MAYO ERANTON"

Perkins shuffled away for the pantry as I was reading the last of it. I looked up and saw that he was gone. Then I turned and looked on him

PROGRAM

Tonight, Thursday, comes Wallace Berry and Kathleen Clifford in "RICHARD THE LION HEARTED," based on Sir Walter Scott's novel "The Talisman." Don't fail to see this one.

Friday—Comes Lon Chaney and Betty Compson in "THE BIG CITY." Chaney is the man with a thousand faces. If you want to see a good one, don't miss this one.

Saturday—Bust Barton in "THE WIZARD OF THE SADDLE." Some western. Also a good comedy.

Monday—Comes Lois Moran in "THE WHIRLWIND OF YOUTH." Now if you want to see youth as it is today, don't miss seeing this one.

LYRIC THEATRE

The rural schools of Nicholas county will open on Monday, August 27, for terms of eight months.

A called meeting of the city council will be held Monday night to receive bids on the plumbing work at the filtering plant.

In publishing the list of graduates of the common schools of the county in last week's issue, the name of Elsie McClanahan was unintentionally omitted.

W.G. and Charles L. Irvin have purchased a tract of 40 acres and 40 poles of the Allen farm in the Moorefield section from John D. Allen. The price paid was about $2,000.

W. O. Back, of Menifee county, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress from this district was in Carlisle this week in the interest of his candidacy and interviewed a number of Democrats.

William Howard, who recently sold his hardware store here to Charles King, has purchased the two-story frame bungalow of his daughter, Mrs. T. T. Hamilton, on Main street. Mr. and Mrs. Howard will move to that place to reside August 1.

Miss Mabelle Scott has been presented with an electric refrigerator by her brother R. M. Scott and wife of Cincinnati. Mr. Scott formerly lived on Mt. Robert Harper and installed in her home by Mr. William Harper, and it is fine.—Contributed.

An audience which packed the auditorium of the Carlisle city school attended the summer school commencement exercises last Friday night when diplomas were awarded 81 graduates. The program was given by members of the class.

Miss Lutie Wilson was awarded first prize for the best essay submitted by a school student in Nicholas county in connection with the recent visit of the live stock special train to Carlisle. Miss Wilson's essay was sent to Louisville to be judged in competition with essays submitted by other school children of the state.

Seven applicants for teachers certificates took the examination given here last Thursday and Friday by Mrs. Eda S. Taylor, county superintendent. They were Mrs. Turner Thomas, Mrs. James Henry, Mrs. Frank Henry, Mrs. John Wilson, Mrs. Grace Darrell, Miss Dortie Carrington and Willie Willoughby.

All who wish to make donations of vegetables, eggs, butter, meat, preserves or any other food toward the entertainment of ten city children at Worth Sapp, at Camp Black Hawk, are requested to leave same at the Mercury office or at Ed Hinton's store not later than Saturday, July 28. The children will be taken to camp on Monday, July 30. Mr. Sapp will call for any donations that cannot be conveniently left at the store. Leave word at Mercury office or Metcalfe's store.

Sunday's issue of the Nashville, Tennessean, published at Nashville, carried a lengthy article concerning the activities of the Bertha Feuerwald social center, of which Miss Okie Baugus, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Baugus, of Carlisle, is in charge. The center is an attractive meeting place for the neighborhood, made up of various nationalities and creeds, where Americanism, athletics, sewing and many other types of work may be found.

Drawing for positions on the Democratic and Republican tickets for Congress were held in Frankfort last week. The Democratic list will contain three names and the Republican five. Following is the order in which the names will appear on the ballots: Democratic—W. O. Back, Pineville; Fred M. Vinson, Louisa; James R. Underwood, Wesleyville. Republican—Truman Sinclegar, Owingsville; Elmer C. Roberts, Campton; Thomas E. Walters, Corbin; Elva B. Tandy, Carlisle; W. Hoffman Wood, Mt. Sterling.

The C. C. Cole Company is conducting one of the most successful clearance sales of high grade merchandise for men and boys ever held in Carlisle. The Mercury was used exclusively to advertise this sale, the bills were printed by the Mercury and the results being enjoyed are proof of the value of this newspaper as an advertising medium. Asking for home trade, this firm has been consistent and has spent its advertising appropriation at home. To quote an advertiser in The Mercury this week—"What is made in Carlisle helps to make Carlisle." See the half-page advertisement of The C. C. Cole Company, page 7, this issue.

Social and Society

The Mercury will appreciate it, if those wishing to give us personal and social items of interest, will call Mrs. E. W. Keller, telephone 12.

A STORM IN SUMMER

(By Ruth Winslow Gordon, Brown County, Ohio.)

Like arrows flashed in a flaming forge
The sun's rays beat upon the helpless earth;
All vegetation seems to shrink and scorch,
The breeze is feeble and of little worth
In combat with the energy of heat,
A butterfly, alla fanning languid wings;
The heat waves shimmer o'er the burning street;
The birds are silent, not a robin sings.

A stillness settles—like the hush of death.
The distant scene seems close and plain to see,
Oppressive calm now hinders every breath,
The leaves hang motionless on every tree.
Low mutterings as of some giant's wrath
Now come from westward, whence the dark clouds grow
Up toward the zenith, in a mighty path,
And front their shelter forked lightnings leap.

Then come the winds, by Aeolus released,
And through the bending tree tops shriek and moan
As if all nature had forever ceased
And turmoil were, the only thing to know.
Torrential rain, in sheeted fury falls on the earth with frenzied, While flattened lie the stalks of growing corn
And branched limbs drop with a sickening crash.

But suddenly Jove's thunderbolts are hurled,
The winds return to their own dwelling place;
The subdued and gently radiant,
Throws on the clouds a bow of promised grace.
