HOW CYRUS LAID THE CABLE

The young inventor of a winged torpedo, in which he purposes to project himself to Mars or Venus or to some of our twinkling neighbors in the "illimitable blue," is being favored with much publicity just now. Even the most credulous, of those of us who are willing to admit that almost anything may happen in the realm of science and invention, read of this ambitious project with skeptical amusement. It remains for some newspaper poet to ridicule in rhyme this modern "Darius Green with his flying machine."

The exploits of the lad, who "soared on eagle wings and lit on Purpy's woodpile," once upon a time provoked a ballad, whose recitation always "brought down the house." Today the ballad-makers write of the "lone young Eagle, winging his way into the rising sun." No one laughs at Lindbergh.

Time flies and wonders pile up on wonders. Today's wild dream becomes tomorrow's accomplishment. A few years ago the world thrilled to and celebrated in prose and verse the laying of the Atlantic Cable. Today men speak to men across the Atlantic without wires; radio impulses flash around the globe; a Lindbergh spans the ocean in his flight and a young man speaks seriously of flying to one of the nearer planets. - -

In 2028 we may dig up a ballad celebrating just such an accomplishment, as the following lines, attributed to John Godfrey Saxe, chronicled the success of Cyrus W. Field, who after countless discouragements and heart-breaking effort, knit two continents together with a strand of steel.

HOW CYRUS LAID THE CABLE

Come, listen all unto my song
It is no silly fable;
'Tis all about the mighty cord
They call the Atlantic cable.

Bold Cyrus Field, he said, says he,
"I have a pretty notion,
That I can run a telegraph
Across the Atlantic Ocean."

Then all the people laughed, and said
They'd like to see him do it;
He might get half seas over, but
He never could go through it.

To carry out his foolish plan
He never would be able;
He might as well go hang himself
With his Atlantic cable.

But Cyrus was a valiant man,
A fellow of decision;
And heeded not their mocking words,
Their laughter and derision.

Twice did his bravest efforts fail,
And yet his mind was stable;
He wa'n't the man to break his heart
Because he broke his cable.

"Once more, my gallant boys!" he cried,
"Three times,—you know the fable"—
("I'll make it thirty," muttered he,
"But I will lay the cable.")

Once more they tried—hurrah! hurrah!
What means this great commotion?
The Lord be praised! The cable's laid
Across the Atlantic ocean!

Loud ring the bells—for, flashing through
Six hundred leagues of water,
Old Mother England's benison"
Salutes her eldest daughter.

O'er all the land the tidings speed,
And soon in every nation
They'll hear about the cable with Profoundest admiration.

Now long live James, and long live Vic
And long live gallant Cyrus;
And may his courage, faith and zeal
With emulation fire us.

And may we honor evermore
The manly, bold and stable,
And tell our sons, to make them brave,
How Cyrus laid the cable.
*Blessing

Importance of Taste

We imperatively require a perception, and a homage to beauty in our companions. Other virtues are in request in the field and workyard, but a certain degree of taste is not to be spared in those we sit with. I could better eat with one who did not respect the truth or the laws than with a sloven and unpresentable person. Moral qualities rule the world, but at short distances the senses are despotic.

Nothing to Write Up

A Massachusetts groom failed to show up at the church where the bride was waiting, and so, as the saying is, there was nothing for the young reporter to do but to go back without a story.—Detroit News.

THE MANIAC

Mrs. J. D. Ockerman, of Potts, sends in the following poem, the publication of which was requested by Mrs. W. Grant, a subscriber in Kent, Washington. We can't say that it is a "poem that we like," but doubtless it has the power of evoking pleasant memories of bygone McGuffey's reader years for some of our readers.—Ed.

(Matthew Gregory Lewis)

Stay jailor, stay, and hear my woe:
She is not mad who sheds to thee
For what I'm now too well I know,
And what I was, and what should be,
I'll rave no more in prood despair:
My language shall be mild, though sad;
And yet I firmly, truly swear,
I am not mad, I am not mad!

My tyrant husband forged the tale
Which chains me in this dismal cell;
My fate unkown my friends bewail—
O jailor, haste that fate to tell!
O, haste my father's heart to cheer!
His heart at once 'twill grieve and glad
To know, though kept a captive here,
I am not mad, I am not mad!

He smiles in scorn, and turns the key;
He quits the grate, I knelt in vain;
His glimmering lamp still, still I see—
'Tis gone! and all is gloom again.
Cold, bitter cold! no warmth! no light!
Life, all thy comforts once I had;
Yet here I'm chained, this freezing night,
Although not mad; no, no, not mad!

'Tis sure some dream, some vision vain,
What! I the child of rank and wealth—
Am I the wretch who clanks this chain,
Bereft of freedom, friends and health?
Ah! while I dwell on blessings fled,
Which nevermore my heart must glad,
How aches my heart, how burns my head;
But 'tis not mad; no, 'tis not mad!

Hast thou, my child, forgot, ere this,
A mother's face, a mother's tongue?
She'll ne'er forget your parting kiss,
Nor round her neck how fast you clung;
Nor how with her you used to stay;
Nor how that tact your sire forbade;
Nor how—I'll drive such thoughts away!
They'll make me mad, they'll make me mad.

His rosy lips, how sweet they smiled,
His gold blue eyes, how bright they shone!
None ever bore a lovelier child,
And art thou now forever gone?
And must I never see thee more,
My pretty, pretty, pretty lad?
I will be free! unbar the door!
I am not mad! I am not mad!

O hark, what mean those yells and cries?
His chain some furious madman breaks;
He comes—I see his glaring eyes;
Now, now, my dungeon grate he shakes.
Help! Help!—he's gone! O fearful woe,
Such screams to hear, such sights to see,
My brain, my brain—I know, I know
I am not mad, but soon shall be.

Yes, soon; for lo, you! while I speak—
Mark how yon demon's eyeballs glare!
He sees me; now, with dreadful shriek,
He whirls a serpent high in air.
Horror!—the reptile strikes his tooth
Deep in my heart, so crushed and sad;
Aye, laugh, ye fiends; I feel the truth;
Your task is done—I'm mad! I'm mad!

MANY GOOD TREES FOR FARM PLANTING

Many inquiries are being received at the Experiment Station at Lexington about the best kinds of forest trees to plant on farms. Clarence Hill Burrage, forester at the Robinson Experiment Substation at Quicksand, offers the following suggestions:

Black locust is grown about the easiest of all trees and grows rapidly even on poor soils. It is a legume and builds up the soil, and posts can be harvested in 10 to 15 years. However, there is a chance that production on a large scale may bring down prices some time in the future, and so it is a good idea to mix other species with locust. On good soils red oak, yellow poplar, white ash and white pine are good trees for this purpose. A larger yield per acre can be secured when more than one kind is present.

Black walnut is easily grown from the nut, and is a fine tree for rich soils. It also does better when mixed with other species. The conifers are better than broadleafed trees on poor soils. Scotch pine is being grown successfully, though it does not produce first class timber. Red pine, Jack pine (also called Banks pine) and shortleaf pine give promise of doing well on poor soils. White pine is fast growing and produces good lumber but requires fairly good soil. Larch has given good results in some plantings.

The State Forester at Frankfort still has some trees available, and trees also can be secured from commercial nurseries.

SEES OPPORTUNITIES IN TURKEY RAISING

Kentucky offers opportunities in turkey raising, thinks Prof. J. Holmes Martin, head of the poultry section of the Experiment Station at Lexington, who has published a new circular on turkey raising. Men and women in several counties reported selling $300 to $500 worth of turkeys last year.

Those who have been successful in raising turkeys are advised by Prof. Martin to continue with their present methods. Those who have had trouble may find helpful suggestions in his circular, which can be secured from county and home agents or by writing to the Experiment Station.

The circular lists the following essentials for successful turkey raising:

Use only strong mature breeding stock. Feed a balanced ration to breeders. Do not feed poults until 48 hours old. Do not overfeed young poults. Keep the poults and mother hen free from lice. Do not let the poults get chilled. Do not raise turkeys in the same yard or pasture with chickens. A brood coop or brooder house to confine hen and poults should be provided for each brood. Do not let turkeys eat green corn. Do not try to cure blackhead; avoid it.

Language Taught Quickly

A full year's work in a modern foreign language may be completed in one summer quarter at the University of Virginia by students who devote their entire time to the study of one language—French, German or Spanish.

LET US BE PREPARED

Rich and poor, young and old --- doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief, farmer and town dweller will benefit directly or indirectly by the acceptance of the opportunities that await us. These are many, but the spirit of working with and for one another is necessary, if we would seize them. For Co-operation is the vital force in the progress and development of any community. This month, next month and every month until success comes, every citizen of town and county should give his or her whole-hearted co-operation to the effort to bring to the attention of the tobacco-buying world Carlisle's just claim that we have here in the heart of a fine burley-producing district the most logical location for

A Loose Leaf Market

Carlisle has three modern, brick tobacco warehouses; a redrying plant and an enormous storage warehouse. Carlisle, as a market, would draw from surrounding counties, in which there is already a demand from the buyers for a conveniently located market. Carlisle as a loose leaf tobacco market would be a convenience to both buyer and producer.

And both the man who buys and the man who sells may be assured of the whole-hearted co-operation of the business and professional men of this community.
