Good Roads that Stay Good

Suppose that one of the state roads in your part of Ken-tucky needs improvement. It's rough and dusty in the summer, and there are chuck holes and ruts in the winter. Naturally, the citizens think that a few loads of rock

Naturally, the cluzens timink that a few loss of rock and perhaps a thin dustless topping would make it a "good road," and at small cost.

But no sooner is this done than traffic begins to increase. The people travel more—they drive to church and store oftener. Some of the farmers buy trucks. In an amazingly short time the road needs a lot of "fixing" again. This means constant expenditure and the road is never satisfactory. That is why it pays to build concrete pavements when traffic needs something better than a gravel or crushed A concrete paved road stays good. The hot sun of summer cannot soften its rigid, even surface. Winter frosts will not break it up.
