THE BLACKBIRDS WARBLING

In our hearts fair hope lay smiling
Sweet as air and all beguiling;
And there hung a mist of bluebells on the slope and down the dell;
And we talked of joy and splendour
That the years unborn would render,
And the blackbirds helped us with the story, they knew it well.

—Norman Ingelow. Poems.

Through the efforts of Hon. Fred M Vinson, a suspension "for further investigation" of the order closing the Carlisle post-office has been secured. Whether further investigation results in the closing of the office or the shelving of the order for good depends upon the effort made by citizens of Carlisle to file effective protests.

Write Senator Sackett or Senator Barkley and Mr. Kendall your protest against this order. Once put into effect, the public would quickly realize the hardship entailed. The general delivery window would be closed at 8 p. m., under the order and the lobby 7 p. m. A special delivery letter arriving on the night train would not be delivered until the following morning. A letter mailed at Lexington, Louisville or Cincinnati at 10 o'clock in the morning would not be delivered until the following day. Afternoon city papers to mail subscribers would be read the following morning.

Through the timely intervention of Mr. Vinson, we are furnished an opportunity to secure a final revocation of this unpopular order. Don't let that opportunity pass.

WANTED—A POWER COMMISSION

Mr. Hoover's Power Commission will pass on the Cumberland Falls case. Mr. West, recess appointee of Mr. Coolidge and former Insull attorney, is succeeded by Dr. Hay Litman Wilbur of California a college president and presumably one who will be able to see more than "aint-nature-wonderful sentimentalism" in the efforts of conservationists to save a lovely waterfall and preserve surroundings of primitive natural beauty.

It may reasonably be hoped that Mr. Hoover the President of the United States and honorary high official of the Izaak Walton League will not let the pleas of conservationists fall upon the deaf ears of Mr. Hoover Iumon engineer. At least there seems to be more hope.

In the meantime whatever brides Kentucky should have its own Power Commission. It is one of a very few States that has practically no voice on the disposal of its water-power rights. Those who fight to save Cumberland Falls from...ver an expression of opinion from Legislative and fanatatical candidates this summer as to their stand on the question of granting water-power rights.

Kentucky should not be caught again in the helpless position of standing by powerless, while a Federal Commission decides what shall be done with a native resource that belongs to all the people of the Commonwealth.

TRUE TO FORM

Running "true to form" and maintaining the well-deserved reputation he has earned as a representative always active and eager to be of service to his constituents, Fred Vinson marched the closing day of his official life by securing the suspension of the order closing the Carlisle post-office at an hour that would deprive box-holders of the most important mail of the day.

"Happy to have performed this service as one of our last official acts for the time," Mr. Vinson wired. "For the time" is a phrase well chosen we think, if this newspaper knows the temper of the Ninth district and does not value too highly the district's appreciation of the high service Mr. Vinson has rendered as its Congressman.

Fred Vinson was defeated by an unusual combination of political circumstances and not because of his record in Congress. In the opinion of The Mercury he will be a stronger candidate than he has ever been, if he chooses to make the race in 1930.

COMMUNITY ADVERTISING

The Mercury has completed, with the issue of February 28, a year's service of Community advertising. What good has it done? Is a fair question. It's a letter question than to ask what good it has done not? For the value of such campaigns of co-operative advertising is not to be measured in returns that the individual always seeks. It does not bring immediate results like a large advertisement of a reduction sale, for instance. Its value to the community, however, is sure and is cumulative.

Though the first six months of the series of paper advertisements carried by the business men of Carlisle for the betterment of the community were devoted to an effort to secure a tobacco market; and though that effort was not successful, yet who is so bold as to state that this repeated publicity did not have an effect that may yet bear fruit? It showed month after month that the leading business men of the town are alive to the value of co-operative effort; that they are trying to do something for the town, whether you see it or not. It tells the world that the town has faith in itself; that it is not dead, nor dying, but very much alive.

As in the case of men, the value a town sets on itself is the value the world gives the town. What do you think the people who read 'The Mercury outside of this county (and there are many of them) said when these attractive page Community Advertisements appealed each month? You can't think for a moment that they said: "Well, I see the business men of Carlisle are carrying a page each month in the interest of community progress and betterment. The old town's dead I reckon." If you think they did, you don't know the power of the printed word. No, it's stuff like that which makes people say: "Say, you must have a live bunch of business men in Carlisle; I've been reading those co-operative ads every month in the paper." That's not hearsay; people have asked us that very question. It's this advertising of the existence of a community spirit that makes people say: "You've got four or five thousand people in your town, haven't you?" And that question is not infrequently asked us.

Community advertising is well worth while. True, this newspaper sells the space; it is the only merchandise it has for sale. We make our living by selling it. But we have the satisfaction of knowing that such merchandise is doing the town and the community a great deal of good. Who would not feel a sense of gratification that the money paid him for merchandise sold would, by the very excellence of the purchase, be returned to the buyer with interest in community betterment, which is, after all, individual betterment multiplied.

This community means much to all of us. It is home; it is where our families are reared; it is the center of our joys and sorrows; it is where our property interests lie. The better the community, the better it is for each individual member of the community.

A greater prosperity for the community as a whole means a greater degree of prosperity for each individual.

The Mercury hopes that the progressive citizens who made possible the first year's Community Betterment Campaign will renew the effort for another year. Sustained advertising has never yet failed to produce results.

FOOLISH ECONOMY

"Coolidge economy?" Surely not.

If the proposed closing of the local post-office at 8 p. m. is a sample of the much-vaunted ballyhoo with which the last administration sought to make itself famous, Coolidge economy becomes foolish economy. Perhaps it was at that.

Weird economists at Washington, they say, will be able to see more than "aint-nature-wonderful sentimentalism" in the efforts of conservationists to save a lovely waterfall and preserve surroundings of primitive natural beauty.

It may reasonably be hoped that Mr. Hoover the President of the United States and honorary high official of the Izaak Walton League will not let the pleas of conservationists fall upon the deaf ears of Mr. Hoover Iumon engineer. At least there seems to be more hope.

In the meantime whatever brides Kentucky should have its own Power Commission. It is one of a very few States that has practically no voice on the disposal of its water-power rights. "WINDMAN SPARE THAT TREE."

Inspector, O. Inspector! Cut the expenses dorls:
"Economy" is the watch-word now in every little town.
Just slice the service here and there and let the public boo—
"Twas sure-fire stuff for Calvin and "tariff serve in '32.
Inspector, O Inspector! While you are sealing down
Expenses and post-office hours in every little town,
Don't worry about service, nor the protests of the mob, but—
Watch your step, Inspector, and touch not a single job!

MARCH BEGINNINGS

In the old Roman calendar March was the first month of the year. Dedicated to Mars, god of fertility, as well as of war, this was the beginning of the first month taken its name from the Roman deity, Janus, god of beginnings.

Yet deposed as March is, in the calendar, she is in England still a month of beginnings—more so than January is. Spring officially begins in March. And though nature does not minutely keep to the time-table, and though there may be late springs, still March has a remarkable number of genuine springlike beginnings. Any naturalist's calendar will show how numerous and important they are. By March in England the elm is in flower—though its flowering often goes unnoticed. Not everybody knows that the elm does flower. Some weeks before the leaf buds open, the lower branches of the elm take on a fuzzy aspect. That is all one sees from below, but that is the beginning of blossoming, one of many spring beginnings. By March there is much a noticeable change in the buds of the horse chestnut—they are swollen and sticky and one knows that the time of leafing is not far away.

By the end of the month, the blackthorn should be in flower, and the pussy willow's catkins should be making ready. Before March is out the young green leaves of the hedgerow should begin to hide the nests of the early builders. By March there is much happening in the bird world. Some ever seem in haste to build, whether their leafy bowers are ready or not. Occasionally a blackbird's nest is found the next with eggs is found in January or February, and fledgling thrushes have been seen in March. But March is the more usual nesting and laying season, early enough surely, when we remember the month's wintry possibilities. March may thus have for us the first nest of the season and that, especially with eggs, is one of spring's most authentic joys.

The tides of migration are well afoot in March. Wheat-ear, willow wrens, martins, swallows, will all appear by the end of March in a favorable season.

By that time also there is a chorus of song. At this season the song of the blackcap, and that wonder of the violet, may sometimes be enjoyed together.

March is the month of the daffodil as well as the violet, that seemingly frail exquisite flower, the wood anemone, belongs to March.

Violet, wood anemone, and daffodil—if that were all, it were enough to make March a favorite in all the wonder and glory of spring. One of the supreme privileges of this month, if one cares to find one or other of those sweet harbingers flowering against a background of withered leaves or broken bracken, is to feel the year's awakened. Spring has come—Christian Science Monitor.

PEOPLE WIN FIRST FALL

Well, the people of Kentucky have won the first fall in the Democratic-Republican fall engagement against the Insull interests. Anyway such a skiff pointed to the game being played to turn this way sooner or later. The general expectations, caused the outgoing administration. And this new administration had better watch its step, too, in this matter. The people back in Kentucky are not going to let up in exacting their pound of flesh. There will be a few among them who would have to...ve the Insull people back in Kentucky, has much to sell to the general public. Outsiders are cordially invited to visit and locate in our state—people who will add to the upbuilding of the commonwealth herein by manufacture of its raw materials and giving employment to working people—these are welcome, thrice welcome, but Kentucky should not be asked to destroy one of the greatest wonders in the eastern part of the nation simply to satisfy a greedy combination of capitalists for their own personal profit at the expense of the people without giving them anything worthwhile in return, something that they need and will be of lasting benefit when secured. —Maysville Independent.

WHY WAS HOOVER ELECTED?

(Cynthiana Democrat)

Each individual, perhaps, has a reason as to why tongue's end, why the Republican party was elected. Yet Prof. Howard Lee McBain, professor of constitutional law at Columbia, told a group of alumni the other day the election of Mr. Hoover is a mystery and even Mr. Hoover himself has not the slightest idea of what the whole people who elected him really want him to do, aside perhaps from trying to arrange some sort of relief for agriculture and nobody knows how to accomplish that.

It was plain from Mr. Hoover's oratory and muddled speeches during the campaign that he did not know what he was to do, and now that it is over and he is about to assume command, he knows no more than he did before. The administration thus is likely to be given an opportunity to character, each day sufficient unto itself.

Were it possible to compile a census of voters in Harrison county, for instance, who cast their ballots for Republican majority was reduced almost to the vanishing point? Did those Democrats who left their party vote for prohibition? Hoover regards it merely "a noble experiment." Did they vote Republican because they advocate Republican principles? Was it to defeat Gov. Smith because he sprang from the sidewalks of New York? Was it because he plainly told them prohibition is not being enforced, which they already knew, and that it cannot be enforced under the present laws, which must be apparent to any sensible person? Was it because he is a Roman Catholic? Was it because his wife is not considered good enough for the White House? Was it Raskob?

What was it? You don't know Hoover does not know. The professor is right. Nobody knows.

BLUE LAWS RETURNING

(Maysville Independent)

We are fast returning to the blue laws. The increase of the penalties for violating the liquor laws shows that we are on the way. It is but a step to the burning fagot and other horrors of the fanatical religionists of other days. The idea of sending a man to prison for five years and fining him $10,000 for having some whisky or even selling it is monstrous and hellish in its lack of humanity. Doing this at a time when the government, national and state, both are beneficiaries from the enormous sale of the whisky they condemn which has created the most diabolical system of thievery, graft and all around cussedness that ever existed in any land, is monstrous. If the government will get out of the liquor business itself, and pour out all the alleged in bond and fix a price for the alleged medicinal brand to be made in the future at such a low figure that there would not be any inducement for profiteers to engage in the business, the nation would be getting somewhere and there would be a return to temperance which was practically destroyed when the idea was commercialized by an organized band of outlaws. There will be temperance and there will be none in this country until we rid ourselves of the professional who are willing for the public treasury and control the politics and the offices of both state and nation.

POEMS THAT WE LIKE

THE BALLAD OF
WILLIAM SYCAMORE

(Stephen Vincent Benet)

My father, he was a mountaineer,
His fist was a knotty hammer.
He was quick on his feet as a running deer,
And he spoke with a Yankee stammer.

My mother, she was merry and brave,
And she came by her laughter,
With a tall green fir for her doctor grave
And the smell of bayberry candles.

The cabin logs, with the bark still rough,
And my mother who laughed at trifles,
And the tall, lank visitors, brown as snuff,
With their long, straight squirrel-rifles.

I ran hear them dance, like a forest song,
Through the deepest one of my slumbers,
The fiddle squeaking the boots along
And my father calling the numbers.

The quick feet shaking the puncheon-floor,
And the fiddle squealing and squeaking,
Till the dried leaves blew in at the door
And the dust went up to the ceiling.

There are children lucky from dawn till dusk,
But never a child so lucky!
For I cut my teeth on "Money Musk"
In the Kentucky Ground of Kentucky.

When I grew tall as the Indian corn,
My father had little to lend me.
He gave me a rifle, a steel, old powder-horn
And his woodsman's skill to befriend me.

With a leather shirt to cover my back,
And a reliable hand to unravel
Each forest sign, I carried my pack
As far as a wood could travel.

Till I lost my boyhood and found my wife
At a gift like a salem clipper!
A woman straight as a hunting knife
With eyes as black as the Dipper!

We cleared our camp where the buffalo fed,
Unheard-of streams were our flagons;
And I sowed my seed like the apple-seed
On the trail of the Western wagons.

They were right, tight boys, never sulky or slow,
Quick as a goldy muster.
The eldest died at the Alamo,
The youngest fell with Custer.

The letter that told it burned my hand,
Yet we smiled and said, "So be it!"
But I cried for five when they fenced the land,
For it broke my heart to see it.

I saddled a red, unbroken colt,
And rode him into the day there;
And threw me down like a thunderbolt
And rolled on me as I lay there.

The hunter's whistle hummed in my ear
As the city-men tried to move me.
But I died in the end as a pioneer
With the whole wide sky above me.

Now I lie in the heart of the prairie-thistle;
Like the seed of a prairie-thistle;
It has walked over many with honey and oil
And joined them clean as a whistle.

And my youth returns, like the rains of Spring,
And my sons, like the wild-geese flying;
And I lie and hear the meadow-lark sing
And have much content in my dying.

So play with the towns you have built of blocks,
The towns where you would have bound me!
I sleep in my earth like a tired fox,
And my buffalo found me.

BOUQUETS OF THE YEAR

(Jessie Linkletter)

In March, a jar
Filled with lilies,
Contains red-tipped alder tassels,
And a slender twig of willow
With buds of silvery hue.

In April, a pot of brown
Holds a trim yellow jonquil.
Bowing to the sun
Like a dainty lady
In a bonnet gown.

A single rose, in June,
Leans from a crystal bowl,
And the satin petals open
To the happy rhythm
Of a sweet, old tune.

In a high bronze cylinder
The goldenrod of fall,
Like a radiant plume,
Of the passing, merry wind.

In December, coy bittersweet
Trails over the rim of a pewter vase.
And the gleaming fruits
Bring a touch of cheer
To a quiet place.

COWARDLY DOG POISONER

(Courier-Journal)

The first dog poisoner who is caught should be turned over to a psychologist for psycho-analysis. What is his emotional excitation? He hasn't the pleasurable thrill the firebug experiences, watching the department run. He is denied the exquisite spectacle of a little pet writhing in mortal agony. Only the sobbing, inconsolable children and their parents have that privilege. What inhibitions prevent him from doing the same thing to human beings? Those inhibitions in a brutal nature may not be very strong.

CO. AGENT'S NOTES

The Golden Hoof Club

In order to save time and to assist the boys to present this subject to their parents your County Agent will try to explain the merits of this sheep men's organization.

The Golden Hoof Club is a county organization of men who are directly interested in this more profitable production of lambs and wool. It has for its objects, (1) more adequate protection for the flocks of the county. It has been active in its good result cooperation towards the enforcement of the dog law that has meant much towards getting all sheep claims paid. (2) The dissemination of information to its members whereby many of their troubles may be anticipated and corrected before they begin. (3) Continued efforts on the part of every member to see that grade and scrub rams do not service in the flocks of our county and (4) That the practice of saving over late ewe lambs to be used for breeding purposes be discontinued as far as possible.

Though more lines of endeavor may be included such as control of Scab, ticks, stomach worms, etc. the four main objects used to keep away from these pests. The membership dues in this county organization amounts to $1.00 for 3 years which includes a 2 year subscription to the Kentucky Farmer and a metal marking edited this year for the first time for the purpose of keep breeders of Kentucky and the College of Agriculture and Kentucky especially by every wealthy men interested in sheep. Membership in the Golden Hoof Club is open to Banks, business houses and individuals as well as those men and women actually owning sheep. Now is your chance to agree to give a small sum of service to your self and your neighbor so when a representative of your Bank or an officer in this club asks you to help, you will not need to have them take time to go into details, but courteously say yes or no. You know the Banks of our county would not undertake to do a piece of work that is at all questionable. They are doing you a favor—meet them half way.

HIGH PRICES OF HEAVY LEAF NOT PROBABLE IN 1929

The good prices which burley tobacco growers received for darker, heavier grades in last year's crop are not likely to be repeated this year, says Charles E. Gage, of the United States Department of Agriculture, who cooperated with the Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky in meetings of growers at Henderson, Owensboro, Shelbyville and Maysville.

"The present unfavorable changing from "signed-up" types of burley to those of the thin or leafy type in eastern Kentucky who are thinking of shifting from dark types to burley, should consider this fact," Mr. Gage points out. He especially cautioned growers in the eastern district about changing from types suited to their land and handling methods to new types which are not well adapted.

"The fact that stocks of leaf tobacco are abnormally large in relation to consumption, practically places the new crop in the category of a 'big crop,' he said. "In order to secure favorable prices, growers should produce what prices should neither starve the market nor glut it. The safe course for growers to about what it was last year.

"Under present unfavorable manufacturing requirements, prices decline and the surplus tobacco accumulates in the form of stocks on hand. Heavy heavy stocks tend to depress prices in succeeding years. Reduced consumption of burley tobacco during the last three years was about 382 million pounds.

At the close of 1928 there were more than 1,000,000 cases of leaf tobacco in factories in the United States, with more than twenty-eight billion dollars on deposit.
