THE WISE

(Arthur Wallace Peach)

A pool by the roadside
May hold the midnight sky;
Why ask the vastness of the sea
To prove it?

A mountain may listen
And hear the starry throng;
A little hill can hear a thrush
Make dusk a song.

If years brought us wisdom,
How sorry we should be;
A moment's truth may even teach
Eternity!

A DAY OF MEMORIES

Today is set aside in our national life as sacred to the memory of the valiant dead, who gave up life for a cause, a belief, the defense of home and country. It is fitting that their memories be honored with observances.

More important to the living perhaps than to those who sleep beneath pine and hemlock are the memorial rites of the day. For the living have need of the encouragement of noble precept, of the assurance that possessed by one man may be possessed by another. We who live have need of contact with the nobilities in the lives of those who sleep and are at rest.

Here the day has become a peaceful, quiet holiday, a day of rest, quiet and blossoms placed tenderly about grassy mounds. It is for some a day of poignant memories, of grief raw and bitter and for others Time, the healer, has softened the pang of the suffering heart.

On the velvety turf of the hill today, among the flowers, memories will come to the living who pay honor to the dead—sad memories, sweet memories—and perchance courage; God grant, Hope.

"Life," writes one who walked toward the great mystery of the unknown with fatherless feet, "is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud—and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreturning dead there comes no word. But in the night of Death Hope sees a star and listening Love can hear the rustling of a wing."

A FRIENDLY WARNING

At Ashland the father of a boy caught shooting song birds has been arrested. The Boyd County Fish and Game Protective Association has issued an announcement that the parent of any boy caught killing song birds will be arraigned and held responsible for the offense.

A heavily wooded tract of fifty acres in the center of the city of Ashland has taught the value of bird protection. Feeding in this tract has brought innumerable kinds of birds, making each target for thoughtless boys with sling shot, air gun and small caliber rifles. The Boyd county association takes the best means to stop this heedless slaughter by heightening the fines and costs of youthful offenders.

Present careful killing may birds in Kentucky may be changed under the law with hunting out of season as well as with killing songsters, a double offense, for which a heavy penalty is provided.

Local kids, thoughtlessly. The Mercury is sure, have been robbing nests and shooting at song birds in the Carlisle cemetery. Parents may assist in the experience of the Ashland man by immediately coming to their sons. The same caution in this section is alert and anxious to enforce the law. He lives in Carlisle frequently. The Mercury hopes that no persistent may be necessary here to protect these healthful friend of man.

WANTS 'OUT FROM UNDER'

The Glasgow Times thanks "Prides" for Sampson is well pleased with the suit over losing the basing of the free text-book act. It will, thinks the Times, give him a chance to "get out from under. And the Lord knows he will welcome it. So will a prayer be with him. Perhaps he will. He should. Think of the thunder it will furnish him—I can hear the barn-devil bell and the bare-kneed girl free school books, her countrymen, but the 'powers of darkness' wouldn't let me!" Hooray for greatness! Fine stuff. But at that it is our opinion that he'd rather see those contracts signed and take his chances at getting out from under. Our Flem Flam is to use an inelegant phrase, too "hell bent" on closing the deal. He just ruthlessly wants those contracts signed.

"CALIFORNIA, HERE WE COME!"

"Ti Dace" Sampson, at a flag and bible presentation by a fraternal order in Fayette county Sunday, defends his text-book selections on the grounds that the texts are the same as the texts adopted by the State of California, first, according to the Governor, in education in the United States. Granted that the Governor knows his California adoption, that California tops the list in educational standards, how does the fact make texts adopted in California suitable for the children of Kentucky? It does not follow in this instance that what is good for one is good for t'other. California and Kentucky differ in many ways, aside from climate, size and geographical location. That the mental pabulum of Kentucky children should be like that California children, because the latter thrive on it, seems illogical to The Mercury. One had as well standardize little moustaches for men because John Gilbert looks well wearing such hirsute adornment on his upper lip.

At least the history texts can't be identical, surely, though one wouldn't be much surprised if our fresh text books expanded on the wonderful climate of California, the superiority of the "native son," the comparative populations of San Francisco and Los Angeles and the fact that no earthquake has ever been knowingly admitted west of the Great Divide. California has climbed to the top of the literacy ladder, says "Professor" Sampson, and what's good enough for California should make the Kentucky young idea shoot, what?

One wonders if they advertise on the covers in California. Probably not. San Francisco and Los Angeles would be bidding for space when the term ended.

But Kentucky is for progress. Yes, sir! she is, comin' and gwine, from and rear, and California has progressed. So let us up on them text books and watch our dust! Look out, California, here we come!

AND FROM MR. HOOVER'S STATE!

The Cynthiana Democrat is our authority for the first and doubtless the best fish story of a season that is opened this year with Red Bluff, California, fisherman.

Two fishermen were having poor luck whipping Battle Creek when one suggested that their bait be soaked in "packard" brandy. This was done and at the first cast the pair felt doubtful and it took the combined efforts of the two sportsmen to reel in the prize. Then they discovered the worm had soiled a big trout by the throat and was choking it.

And the most eminent angler in the country, hailing from the same State, but now abiding in Washington, came back from his week end trout expedition with a fish story and an empty creel. The President should send back home for some of that bait-soaker.

THE WOMEN—BLESS 'EM!

The Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs was not stampeded into a reversal of its policy of conservation at Ashland. Despite the subtle and determined campaign of those who would prevent Cumberland Falls to the power interests, a resolution condemning the exploitation of the natural wonder for commercial purposes was passed by an overwhelming vote.

To the power promoters this their quick and utter rout was doubtless a surprise, for the campaign had been thorough. But the recent house of the Kentucky Club Woman had appeared to have settled the matter and progress had to be considered at Ashland:

"Whereas, Hydro-electric power has a direct bearing on human welfare, as well as upon the industrial and economic life of the country,

"Whereas, the question of the development, the ownership and the control of hydro-electric power is one of vital interest to every citizen;

"Be It Resolved: That these questions involved in hydro-electric development become the subject of study by the member Clubs of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs."

This resolution was introduced, no doubt, in good faith. That it was introduced as the result of subtle suggestion is a reasonable conclusion. The power folk move in mysterious ways and that resolution contained potential dynamite.

Then, under date of May 16, letters went out from Williamsburg to presidents of Kentucky women's clubs. They were signed, "Women Club of Williamsburg." The letter charged "gross misrepresentation or lack of understanding of the true situation" by those who favor the acceptance of the gift of Senator du Pont and the preservation of the Falls region in all its primitive beauty. This letter contained the sensible statement that "women are acquainted with the facts, know that without the proposed hydro-electric power we can not expect to get the park or any hard surfaced roads leading to this isolated section."

Perhaps the absurdity of that statement alone was enough. At any rate, despite the fact that the Chairman of Governor Sampson's "Anti-Paris" Commission presented the cause of the power companies, the women of Kentucky were not hoodwinked into confusing a policy that would give to Chicago capitalists a resource and natural wonder, God-given, beautiful, and in its primitive loveliness potentially invaluable to its particular section, to the Commonwealth and to future generations of Kentuckians.

One may be thankful for the knowledge that the club women of Kentucky refuse to be exploited, whatever the outcome of the struggle of a State to protect a resource that belongs to Kentuckians of today and tomorrow—a resource so endowed with attributes of the unbounded beauty the pioneer knew, that it becomes, in addition, an asset of the Nation.

"I see," said Cap, the Chirotonsor, as he placed the teeth of his comb in the tender part of the victim's head and leaned on it while he used the clippers on his neck, "where the mail order houses are going to put out a car that sells for two or three hundred dollars—a little bitty car."

"Where'd you see that?" asked the victim, slapping at the comb.

"Right there in the dogpone paper," replied Cap. "No, not today's pogpone some paper. Shore as God made little apples I saw it."

"Why said you didn't?" replied the victim, "pulling the comb out of his scalp.

"Well, you looked sorty doubtful," said Cap.

"It was the pain," said the victim. "They've had little cars like that in England for years."

"Yeah, I know that," said Cap. "Ever see one?" asked the victim, stopping down in the chair to get away from the comb.

"No, but I know about 'em," said Cap. "Fella in England wrote me all about it."

"Was he a barber?"

"Lordamercy, no, son! Who'd believe a dogpone barber? This fella—that's matter, razor hurtin' you? You dogpone tootin' he wrote me. Right hundred dollars they said for; they think that's cheap in England—only they don't call 'em dollars."

"No? What do they call 'em?"

"Yeah. Powder on your face? Lazback, holdback, stayback?"

"What did you say they called dollars in England?

"Yeah. Next victim! Ain't you gonna change? Gimme match, cap, gimme match—"

"Was it kopeks?"

"Yeah, that's the dogpone word—cold feeks. Ha! Ha! Ha! Old cock peeks! Call again. Next victim!"

SOMEWHAT RARE

"Stanley, in his speech here Monday talked and sounded more like a United States Senator than ever before in his life. And how he'd shine in that assemblage of timid, ordinary men—Glasgow Times."

"A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." Owsley Stanley, much abused, is too, only able and courageous, but honest. And that, by children, can't be said of many politicians.

LETTERS TO THE MERCURY

To the Editor of the Mercury

Practically every school man in Kentucky, regardless of politics, will support State Superintendent of Public Instruction W. C. Bell in his refusal to be a mere 'rubber stamp' at the behest of the honest-to-goodness Governor of the State. "Go on and sign," I want you to understand that you are merely the servant of this commission," imagine the State Textbook Commission; she Governor is reported to have said to Mr. Bell.

"I recognize that I am the servant of this commission," Mr. Bell is reported to have said in reply, "but I want YOU to understand that I am not the slave of the commission's master."

Now Mr. Bell comes out in a manly straightforward letter to the public and puts attempts on the part of the Governor to take over duties belonging exactly to Mr. Bell's office. Mr. Bell reviews the action of the commission in designing an "all scholastic" test to be the concensus after Mr. Bell had refused to do so, until he had had time, at least, to read them. The result of this is vested with no such authority by the commission or the statutes that Mr. Bell wrote. The "acting secretary" named one of the examiners, the fact is said, but the firm which received the contract since has written to him that it cannot accept the contract.

Mr. Bell's letter relates that, during several adop-ten period, educators on the commission, after carefully and analyzing textbooks for many days, matured preferential lists of textbooks for various subject fields. For illustration, he declares, they the members of the commission by straw vote selected from sixteen spellers submitted for consideration a preferential list of five, the implication being that one of the preferred list later would be adopted. Mr. Bell goes on: "When the chairman announced the nominations were in order for speller for adoption, the secretary of the commission was amused to hear another member of the commission nominate a speller that had not previously received a single vote of approval by any educator on the commission had received SEVEN VOTES, whereas the speller ranked highest in the straw balloting by the commission received but ONE vote."

Thus little by little, Mr. Bell is permitting the parents of school children of Kentucky to see the inner workings of one of the Governor's "honest-to-God," or "honest-to-goodness" commissions with which the Governor has gleefully bells Kentucky he has surrounded himself. It is not too much to say that the Governor "hit off too big a chew," when he attempted to put his collar around Mr. Bell's neck.

There is one way to correct the evils attending the so-called "adoptions" being made at Frankfort and that is to reveal the entire Howard textbook law when the Legislature meets again and put the adoptions of real and honest school books in the hands of educators, where they rightfully belong. Previous State Textbook Commissions have been, for the most part, made up of educators, or at least those who knew something about the operation and needs of the public school system. If the purpose of the present law is to vest in the hands of the Governor the entire selection notwithstanding his announced purpose of placing the selections in the hands of a personnel of ten or twelve counsellors, —then the question must be asked: Why appoint a commission, at all, if they must vote as the Kentucky Mussolini directs and dictates?

The Governor of Kentucky seems to be in for a fine picnic when the Legislature is convened next January; and some of the more representative members of the Assembly may make the Governor wish he had never dabbled in skunks, polecats, "possum—or school books. The sympathy of the State is with Mr. Bell, especially when he declares that, although changes in books are limited to 20 percent in any one year by the Howard law, the Governor has changed 100 percent of the elementary books and 75 percent of those intended for the high school. Parents of school children will not tolerate this arrogance or extravagance.

STRAWS IN THE WIND

(Courier-Journal)

Unless Superintendent Bell is egregiously in error, Governor Sampson has ruthlessly shattered a sedulously cultivated illusion as to the popularity of straw votes. The Governor, as chairman of the State Textbook Commission, began deliberations upon the selection of textbooks by having each member submit a preferential list of five in the order of his preference. But when it came to the final adoption in one subject, the State Superintendent says, a book which had not figured in any preference list was nominated and adopted by a vote of 11 to 1 for the book which had topped a competitive list. Only one book in the entire elementary field which led in the straw vote was adopted.

Superintendent Bell was struck by the unanimity of sentiment among his associates in the commission, composed of the Governor and his appointees. It has been apparent, from his opinion "that the other eleven members have, as a rule, agreed in caucus in advance about what was to be done at any particular meeting."

Caucus action prevailed over the straw vote. The latter appears to have been merely a means by which the Governor tested the individual judgment of his commissioners and found it undependable. Their preferential list was thrown into the waste and now, are conjectural. All that is left is that "the forward art, ostensibly limiting changes to 20 per cent of the books to be used, is self-evident. The adoption changes 100 per cent of the elementary books and 75 per cent of those in high school. The State Superintendent as ex-officio secretary of the board informed the Governor that he was only the "servant" of the commission to execute its will by affixing his signature to contracts without studying them. Fortunately for Kentucky in this instance, the axiom, "like master, like man," doesn't apply. He is trying to augment himself with the terms of the contracts about which he wasn't consulted as secretary, and get the schools open on time, and he requires no defense. The curious repudiation of that straw ballot at last showed which way the wind was blowing.

POEMS THAT WE LIKE

ANOTHER DAY

(George Lawson)

I walked along a swamp one rainy day
And saw a thing of mud and stagnant pools
Above whose brooding silence, hordes of frogs
Croaked raucously. I hurried by and thought:
'On this way I will never pass again,
And yet it happened that I did return
One brighter day and lo, I found a spot,
Where sedge and tule and the iris grew
And tiny Hylas poured a symphony—
Of southern breezes crooned a melody,
And Red Wing sang above his nesting mate.
Here, loath to go, I tarried by the bank
And thought: "I soon must pass this way again."

SHADBUSH

'Ada Frances Almy's

When throbbing drums of Spring's parade
Are heard through forest, field and glade,
Its plant and bush and tree;
Each snatches up her handiest straps,
A rap or scarf or shawl perhaps,
And hurries out to see.

For Springtime passes with such haste
There is no precious time to waste
In choosing one's attire.
They hide or trade her gay red shawl,
She does not heed the swamp at all.
But splashes through the mire.

And small-boy, frank, runs by and talks
To Willow, who beside him walks
And stoops to hear his plea.
And as she bends her head to hear,
Her cowl he may have said.
Her soft green veil has kissed her cheek
And set her eyes a-dancing.

She's as tho in fairy day
And snow-white gown, as from a fairy
Awakened lightly?
Her heart holds Shadbush in high place
Such youthful unwillingness grace
Seems Spring's epitome.

EMILY

She had a garden full of herbs,
And many pleasant things.
Like pink round asters in the fall.
Her faces white flags a week in spring.

Housewives ran in each hour or so,
For sprigs of thyme, mint, parsley, too;
For pans to borrow, or some meal;
She was the kindliest thing they knew.

Tall and half slender, slightly grey
With gay, thin lips, eyes flower-clear
She brained her stock was Puritan;
Her usual name was Caroline
Below Woodcroft Reese, in Wild Cherry.

INDIAN SLUMBER SONG

(T. Morris Longstreth)

Sleep thy first siesta little Brother
While the lake is calm and deep,
Home for the winking fireflies now,
The clucking hens to sleep.

The young moon crashes dim his sire
Into gray mist and dew,
And Coo-o-o-sleep-all! I hear an owl
Call, and call.

Sleep soft in thy nose, little Brother,
And grow thee strong so fair,
A night wind softer now than tears,
The peepers watch is done
Dark hours are for the dreamers
ah,
No slumber deep, before
They silence mother rocks the nest
No more, no more.

HUMAN LIFE IS CHEAP

(Exchange)

Since the beginning of history, human life has been held more cheaply than any thing else in the world. It is so held to-day.

A large percentage of the human race has always been found among the criminality, ignorance or carelessness of fellow men.

Could the minds of all men be directed to the preservation of human life, what a difference it would make! Instead of wars, no more murders, no more preventable deaths through automobile accidents, no more lives lost in mines started through carelessness—how changed would be the front pages of our daily papers!

To mention only three causes of violent death, the best authorities estimate that in the United States each year 10,000 are murdered, 25,000 are killed in automobile accidents and 15,000 are burned to death.

The total number of persons killed in accidents now reaches more than 75,000 a year.

While giving our attention to a multitude of other reforms and isms, would it not be well to devote more serious thought and action towards reducing this appalling and unnecessary waste of human life.

A VIRTUOUS TREE

What a great heart-an apple-tree must have! What generous work it makes of blossoming! It is not content with a single bloom for each apple that is to be; but a profusion, a prodigality of blossoms there must be. The tree is but a huge bouquet. It gives you twenty times as much as it needs in food fruit and usefully because it loves to blossom. We will not think virtuous tree. Not beautiful in form, often clumpy, cragged, and rude; but it is glorious in beauty when efflorescent. Nor is it beauty only at a distance and in the mass. Pluck down a twig and examine it as closely as you will; it will bear the newest looking. . . . It is all the better for being common. I love a flower that all may have; that belongs to the whole, and not to a select and chosen few. Common, for world!—Henry Ward Beecher, in "Star Papers."

THRIFT PRACTICE BEST

RULE TO BE FOLLOWED

By S. W. Straus, Freidnt American Society for Thrift

"This session of the year marks a new epoch in the lives of a large portion of our population. It is the time when hundreds of our young people are leaving institutions of learning and going into the world of practical affairs. It is in keeping with the spirit of the day, therefore, that thought be given to some of the problems that will confront these young people as they move forward in the journey of life.

"If it were possible to lay down a general rule for the benefit of everyone such a rule would be along the lines of encouraging thrift practices. We all have different ambitions and points of view. The philosophy of life with each of us necessarily varies somewhat. It is these differences in sentiment and thought that underlie the great drama of life. But we all may be sure that there is one wheel of interests cannot be served through thrift.

"No matter what may be our environment we can hope for no progress in life if we are wasteful of our time, energies, health and material possessions. Thrift habits are a safeguard against practices that lead only to failure.

We may differ on questions of ethics and morality but we will agree that silence, lack of ambition and dissipation cannot go with thrift. Those who are thrifty will always be found in the march of progress. Some will be more successful than others—the factors of circumstance and ability will tell—but where there is thrift there always will be progress. Where there is lack of thrift there always will be retrogression either present or potential.

"Those who at this time leaving their schools and colleges no doubt find themselves the recipients of ample counsel but no matter what may be said to them along these lines nothing will prove of more lasting, practical value than the admonition to bear in mind at all times that success, prosperity and happiness are the rewards only of those who practice thrift.

DISEASE GERMS

State Board of Health Bulletin Thursday by Dr. J. L. Jones, Director, Bureau of Epidemiology of the State Board of Health discussed "Disease Germs and Disease" in the weekly Health talk over WHAS.

Dr. Jones said: "The old adage, 'An ounce of prevention it worth a pound of cure,' is a basic law of good health. Efforts to prevent disease can be traced to our earliest historical records. Moses and his followers appreciated the importance of cleanliness, pure water and sanitation, and no one was slow to bury body wastes to prevent the contamination of streams and the spread of disease.

"Contagious diseases are caused by minute living bodies, called 'germs,' which gain entrance to the body, multiply in it, and produce poisons which cause the symptoms characteristic of the different diseases. Such diseases are frequently spoken of as 'catching,' or, as infectious or contagious and sometimes are referred to as infections or contagions.

"During the course of many diseases the germs are set free from the body in its discharges, and thus through ignorance or carelessness may be conveyed or communicated from the sick to the well. It is actually not the disease, but the germs or seeds of the disease that are communicated.

"The first principle of disease prevention is that no germs shall enter the body. The most effective measure for accomplishing this is to destroy them as they emerge. This means the control or destruction of discharges from the diseased person and with these maladies. This is one of the important duties of the duties of physicians, nurses, health officials and other public workers, who may have the sole responsibility for such diseases in their early stages. It is of utmost importance to avoid contact with persons who are sick or who are suspected of illness.

"Another important fact is that the control or destruction of discharges from the diseased person affected with these maladies. This is one of the important duties of the duties of physicians, nurses, health officials and other public workers, who may have the sole responsibility for such diseases in their early stages. It is of utmost importance to avoid contact with persons who are sick or who are suspected of illness.
