TRIBUTE

(Queene B. Lister)

Her garden was not half as much As some that grow;
Nor hedge nor plotted flowerbed, Nor a stately row.

An orange crate, a battered pail Holding what she planted.
Every evening on her roof She watered them and chanted.

Nasturtiums and geraniums, Little flavorful things.
Growing on a city roof Like songs with petal-wings

Her garden was not half as much As some that grow
She called one flower, "Mary," And another, "Jo."

She never had a lover.
Or an orchid—or a babe—
But she watched a Jewish mother, And named a flower, "Abie."

Winter, and she took them in Unas her only table.
Yuletime, and she whispered, "And a flower was on a stable."

In a snow-hushed city She hurried through the drifts—Before Christ and His birthday of praying Or exchanging gifts.

To lay one little "Mary" For a crumpled Jo—
Upon a Christmas altar—
Mute God had watched them grow.

CHRISTMAS TRAGEDIES

MARK TWAIN NUMEROUS

Christmas Day, 1929, was marked with unusual violence throughout the nation, a summary of tragedies occurring on that memorable day of cruelty and sin, revealing a long list of fatal accidents and homicides.

A North Carolina farmer killed his wife and six children until then considered suicide. A coroner's jury declared he was insane. A Cincinnati man killed his wife and child were found slain at Harrison, Ohio.

At Castle, Okla., three men were killed when their automobile was struck and knocked down a telephone pole and the high tension wires fell on them. This was the most unusual of a series of accidents reported all over the nation that claimed almost a score of lives.

Six men died in two Christmas Day airplane accidents, residents of Chicago, suicides and homicides swelled the lists of reportable tragedies; a Ruthalia, N. Y., a man crushing in a small boat was killed by consternation.

A prisoner was taken from the Jackson, Ky., jail and shot. Also at Jackson a blind boat was shot and killed in the store of which he was proprietor.

Several persons died in Kentucky automobile accidents, and three negro children were burned to death at Paris.
