THE VALUE OF TOBACCO STALKS

(Lexington Herald)
While farmers in all parts of the state are putting forth their efforts to get their tobacco crops to the market, many of them are overlooking the importance of taking good care of the stalks. In driving through the country one sees a large pile of stalks beside nearly every barn. It is good economy to throw them out the door that is nearest them. Every farmer knows these stalks are valuable for fertilizer but few of them know just how valuable. Also few farmers realize that the fertilizing value of the stalks is not lost when they are exposed to the weather. The barn also contains a large amount of potassium and also a considerable amount of nitrogen and phosphate the three most important elements required by growing crops and grasses. These elements are left in a form easily released from and only a little rain is required to wash out all of the fertilizing value.

Tobacco must be grown on good land and should be followed by a large amount of the plant food removed by the crop grown to grow it. Crop rotation takes from the soil a large amount of plant food. The tobacco plant feeds in the stalks as well as the leaf. The stalks contain a large amount of potash and other elements that are returned to the soil in the form of manure when the stalks that be returned to the stalks that be returned to the soil.

There are various ways of preserving and handling tobacco stalks. Some farmers haul them back and scatter them over the land. Some farmers grind the stalks in their tobacco barns and have the ground stalks hauled to the fields the next day to be hauled. The stalks are then evenly scattered over the land and plowed under. Some farmers put the stalks in a silo and run them through a cutter and then put them in the silo. Others put them in a pile and cover them with dirt. Others put them in a pile and cover them with straw and then with dirt. Others put them in a pile and cover them with straw and then with dirt. Others put them in a pile and cover them with straw and then with dirt.

NEW ERSKINE HAS SPEED POWER AND GOOD LOOKS

A representative of The Mercury visited the Erskine factory in Detroit on the street of the new Erskine with W. F. Gaskin, proprietor of the Model Motor Garage this week. The new Erskine is a beauty. It has the appearance of speed and envelops lots of power.

In fact it is the opinion of the writer that the Erskine is a much faster piece of machinery than the Model A Ford but we have not yet had the opportunity to run and from its easy riding qualities it would be hard to see any difference in a much higher speed machine.

The new car has some original features, but the most striking is the absence of the motor. The coach work is worthy of a much higher priced car and as for speed, your nerve seem to tell you that you are doing it. The representative of The Mercury doesn't like being held around in a car and only runs also in four. 1?

A Borrowed Garden

By H. LOUIS BAYBOLD

JANE BROWN'S slender fingers lay idly on the keys of her typewriter. Her head was bent and her eyes were closed.

A mood of dreams had gripped her mind. Far away from London, quietly and peacefully, had stepped a cozy little cottage with a garden in front. Her garden. Jane could grow either flowers or vegetables, just as she liked. Her own garden!

Gracious me gave 13 bones of fruit and 13 cans and shrubs. 13-13 for crippled children. $2.00 All-Prayer Society Home. 1 cow, 1 calf, 2 spring. 2 pairs stockings to Rood and fox terriers. 7 glasses jelly for fresh air boys in our local boy scout band. 1 children. 7 glasses jelly for fresh air boys in our local boy scout band. 1 children, chicken soup, jelly, with 2 live chickens. 2 pairs stockings to Rood and fox terriers. 1 pair shoes described for 3 Young Crusaders; we have pair shoes and send sent $1.50 to Anna Gordon Mission fund.

Her word before our local W. C. T. U. with program, usual as our subject, "Narcotics." We advocated narcotic laws—are narcotic hunters and have narcotic problem on county. Narcotics sold more, cottage cheese and lemonade.

Mrs. Bruce Hughes, Sec.

Jane's mind was in a sweet flood of forty women walking up and down the garden path, admiring her flowers and exclaiming at smile and nod with her. But Jane's mood changed to a pensive one, led her to contemplate matrimony. Of course, a woman as self if not very tremendous favor.

Jane's mood was startled during after supper she went hesitantly neat door and knocked.

She had rehearsed carefully but when she was greeted by a man in his shirt sleeves, she completely forgot it when he asked her to come in. Jane thought he was using wile by a full young man.

Still it was less embarrassing to sit down than to say a word to stand there indefinitely saying nothing at all.

"I—I am your next-door neighbor, Jane Brown," she said, trying not to ask awfully big favor. Could I—that is, would you be willing to spare me a few minutes some evening?"

The man looked at her as if he was surprised at the request, gave no indication of it, however. "I don't know what you mean," he said, "Miss Brown." In his politeness "Are you trying to tell me that you'd like to marry me?"

Jane's head was thought was to get out of there as quickly as possible. But Jane's new thought was to get out of there as quickly as possible. But Jane's new thought was to get out of there as quickly as possible. But Jane's new
