EDITORIAL POTPOURRI

The present business depression, Mr. Babson tells us, can not more be ignored than can a broken leg. He says that to ignore it is to make it worse. Mr. Babson advises business men to get to business in spite of their troubles, make improvements, reduce expenses, and so on.

Mr. Babson's advice to go to work, "Don't worry, be happy," is a good one. It is a good one because it is a good one. It is a good one because it is a good one.

Your Power Supply - and Your Neighbor's

The grouping of electric systems of a widespread area into one large electric system has brought about today's efficient power supply in small communities.

Just as in the large city, mass production and mass distribution of electricity become possible. Greater efficiency in operation, and hence greater economy result.

The transmission-system type of electric supply is among the outstanding industrial developments of the past fifteen years.

Supplanting local plants, it has brought greater efficiency, greater dependability and wider distribution of electric service to small towns and rural areas.
