EARLY POTATOES

By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College Of Agriculture

The time to plant early potatoes in Kentucky is just as soon as the ground can be prepared. If breaking was done last fall or before freezing weather the past, so much the better, for then the plowed-under vegetation, even though it was only a cost of weeds, will have had time to begin rotting. If the potato patch is still unbroken, it should be attended to as soon as it is in condition to break, for potatoes need an early start to do well. It is well to turn under a good coat of manure, so as to make the soil capable of holding moisture. While well-rotted manure is preferable in that its plantfood is more quickly available, partly-rotted manure may be used safely, on early potatoes. Much of the success in growing potatoes depends on the seed. The safest course to pursue is to use nothing but certified stock, for its use guarantees a reasonable freedom from the so-called "running-out" diseases. Certified seed costs more than "common" seed, but it is worth the difference, for its use has given increases in yield of over 50 per cent in the past 7 years, planted alongside "common" seed.

The seed should be treated to prevent scab. The directions are given in Kentucky Potato Circular No. 203. A copy will be sent from the Experiment Station, or county agents may be able to supply it.

Potatoes need abonnant plantfood. No matter how "rich" the garden is, it will pay well to use a good fertilizer, in addition. If sufficient manure has been used to insure rank growth of corn, for instance, the fertilizer may be superphosphate, sown in the open furrow and worked in, before the seed is dropped. In fact, the superphosphate is a necessity to balance the fertility of such a soil. Rank potato tops frequently produce disappointing yields.

If the soil has been only moderately manure, a complete fertilizer should be used instead of superphosphate, for nitrogen may be lacking. Instances of well balanced fertilizer are: 3-8-6, 4-8-4 and 4-10-4. Complete fertilizer is applied in the same way as that suggested for superphosphate. The rate, in all instances, is 1 pound to 20 feet of furrow.

Early potatoes are usually planted no deeper than 2 or 2 inches below the level of the ground. If there is likelihood of freeze or frosts, it is best to cover with a ridge of 3 or 4 inches in addition. This ridge is to be dragged off after the potatoes have started.

In cultivating early potatoes it is of advantage to ridge the rows slightly so that the tubers will not become uncovered. This is especially true in the event the potatoes are to be dug only as they are needed. Excessively high ridging is, however, not recommended, for this may work a hardship on the potatoes in a dry season.

The best variety for Kentucky is Irish Cobbler, for its quality is excellent, and its yield dependable, even in adverse seasons. In parts of the state where the rainfall is uniform the Early Ohio and the Carman are quite satisfactory, but they behave disappointingly in dry seasons.

STATION REPEATS SEED CORN WARNING

The Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky is repeating its warning about the possibility of poor seed corn this year, due to the wet, cold fall. Corn matured late and low temperatures came while the grain still contained a large amount of moisture. The situation is similar to that of 1917-18 but probably not as serious.

Considerable of the seed corn sent in the Experiment Station for testing has given good germination, which indicates that good seed is available in the state. There is no doubt, however, but that a large percentage of crib corn will give poor germination. This especially is true in the western half of the state.

No corn selected from the crib should be used for seed until a germination test has been made. Such a test ought to be made at once. Take 3 or 4 grains from different parts of each ear and mix together well. Count out 100 grains and germinate in moist sand kept in a warm place or use a rag doll tester.

Seed sent to the Experiment Station will be tested free of charge. By testing early sufficient time will remain to obtain seed from another source provided the test shows poor germination.

Corn selected for seed should not be shelled until near planting time.

BECOMES HIGH SCHOOL STUDENT AT SIXTY

When James Clevenger, 69, entered Prestonsburg high school, at Prestonsburg, Ky., recently he became probably the oldest high school freshman in America.

Though Mr. Clevenger has been teaching for 41 years and holds a teacher's certificate for life, he is determined to become a high school graduate. Mr. Clevenger is a believer in the adage, "You're never too old to learn," but on the other hand disapproves of the old saying which runs, "You can't teach an old dog new tricks."
