Convenience Dependability and Economy

ELECTRIC power has brought to the farm a substitute for muscular effort and antiquated methods—a substitute which is convenient, dependable and economical.

It means more than simply having plenty of light in the home or at the barn. It means lighting the farm with a care that is inexpensive, ever-willing servant to do the washing, the ironing, the cooking and the churning.

It means that the seemingly endless chores of the farm, the necessary ever after a full day's work has been done, are easily and cheaply accomplished by the hired man—electricity.
