And having looked to Government for bread on the very first scarcity they will turn and bite the hand that fed them—Burke.

The Tobacco Problem.

The one sovereign remedy for this recurring evil is, for the life of the tobacco grower is the remembrance of the fact that it is folly to suck the law of supply and demand. When the market is glutted with tobacco the price may not be maintained at a profitable level by any artificial means. When the manufacturers of tobacco must have more tobacco to meet the demand of their trade, the price will rise.

How the supply may be reduced is the question. It is a question that newspaper scientists is unable to answer. Seemingly it requires a matter of cessation prom- ise and courage the hope that seems to spring eternal in the breast of tobacco growers, who, year after year, increase their acreage and hope for the best. Preaching a reduction of acreage does no good. The man who sees his neighbor over the face of the earth with tobacco is willing to sacrifice every- where that it is wise for him to reduce his acreage. So plant-beds flourish and the acreage increases, until the market is glutted and the manufacturers, not needing this enormous quantity of leaf to meet the demands of the trade, take it at his own price.

Pools have usually followed the pyramiding of curtailment prices for luxury tobacco. These function for a few years and end, usually with the mem- bers of the organization unwilling to continue their contracts. While ad- parently stabilizing the price to some extent, it must be admitted that the withdrawal of the acreage to other lines has been effected while the process of stabilization was going on, so that the end the result was much like a dog chasing his tail. The price was stabilized, the increase in the original burley belt and in other States that had said grass burley was enormously increased and the law of supply and demand took up the old leering look.

We believe that the theory of re- ciprocity is sound. That is, we believe, unless peculiarly environ- ments of burley tobacco growing, that reciprocity would benefit us in the most possible. And because it is impossible to prevent to be practically impossible to get a one hundred percent reciprocity in the amount grown of tobacco.

The condition of the man growing more than sufficient home supply for tobacco as a return for the years labor is pitiful. His all is invested in tobacco, and all of his and his family's chances of a subsistence comes from the Superstitious added to these, but what that something is we cannot tell. Only that something is wanting, is evident.

"No Man Who Has Seen War."

"His wants a man who Dedicated to Peace and Hates War," is editorial reply to Brookhaven Editor Franklin Parker Stockbridge, published in the American Press and published. Let The Eagle Scream.

The South has seen war.

And that is true. No man who has seen war, even if his experience has not included actual service, hates war. If his head is anointed like the sufferings of humanity.

Even now, this writer believes, we are experiencing the horrors of war- the more or less direct result of that world-wide carnage which scarred Asia, destroyed many mankind and left a world manifestly debased, mad and money crunk as its after- math.

Those who profit because by themselves open to the charge of the desire for rich profits of wartime profiteers them. Profiteers are simply of industries. Perhaps they are simply of that flag-waving breed who believe patriotism is reflected by a chicken-in-the-shoulder attitude.

However that may be, the world is sick of war and Mr. Brockbridge voices a real service in his splendid reply to Mr. Stockbridge. His closing para- agraph is well worth pondering in this election which calls itself Christian, to-wit:

"Let the eagle scream? Why should he scream? Why this is paean of hate, instead of a song of good will and of helpful aim- bition? Yes, we have the best country. Does it not to our fathers the ledge of that fact or increase the excellence of our country to let the eagle scream it out to the world? Yes, we have been favored beyond reason for that happiness that comes with peace and prosperity, of that brings comfort and independ- ence and culture and understanding sympathy for our neighbors, whether they be our neighbors across the street or our neighbors across the water."

An Unfair And Ridiculous Tax.

The proposed increase of the Fed- eral tax on tobacco is absurd. To- bacco is already overtaxed and such taxation is one reason for the starva- tion prices that obtain this winter. Mr. Mellon and Mr. Hoover justify their suggestion that the Federal tax on tobacco be increased one-sixth by the assertion that tobacco is not a necessity. Possibly it is not a neces- sity to the user—though many will emphatically deny this—but where the grower is forced to depend upon this crop for his bread and meat, it be- comes a necessity to him.

The imposition of this tax will serve to reduce further the price on a product, which, in its manufactured state, pays more to the federal gov- ernment than either the grower or the manufacturer receives for his product.

Naturally the tobacco will howl, wherever the Mellon-Hoover increase is levied, but that tobacco now taxed as it is, and that it is unfair and unjust that another Federal imposition is un- fair and ridiculous. Surely Congress will not permit such action.

The Man For The Place.

Speaking before the Department of Superintendence, Kentucky Educa- tion Association, at Frankfort last week, James H. Richmond, newly elected Superintendent of Education, in his proud of that fitness for the office he occupies which has friends recog- nized during the campaign.

Kentucky parents may well feel that the election of Mr. Richmond has meant a definite forward step in the education of their children. Mr. Richmond knows educational con- ditions in this State, recognizes the faults of the present system and has the courage to demand a remedy. His recognition of the fact that law be immediately changed to take from sub-district trustees the right to name county teachers, county examin- ers, etc., and that county boards of education be elected from the county at large and not from the districts shows that Mr. Richmond is keenly alive to the faults of the present system and has thought out con- structive remedies.

This writer, knowing Mr. Richmond personally, predicts that his regime will mean an epoch of advancement and accomplishment in the State De- partment of Education. Kentuckians could not have selected a better man.

Fine, But Improbable.

It is the Richmond Register, as we remember, that suggested recently the passage of some fool district prohibi- laws and no more by the Legislature this winter. That would be fine, but improbable.

Every member, especially the newly elected, goes to Frankfort with a pet law in his system and quite often he gets one. Governor Ruby Laffoon, with assistance of colleagues with similar pet legislation, will have his hands full. Every two years the statutes are burdened with more and more useless and dead-letter enactments, which already clutter the statutes needlessly.

The Mercury would like to see the session adjourn distinguished as a economy session. Legislation that has been and repealed many outworn and use- less statutes, should be the order, not a possession. Each of enactment should be made to stand the test: Is there is an end, both on its part and on the part of the people it affects?

Optimists.

The "better feeling" in every line of business, heralded by Security Dealers- man, is borne out by the fact that the Louisville Gas and Electric Company reports an increase of 10 per cent in the number of consumers added to date, but that the increase in November will be greater.

Coal Lord Wren the fact that fewer book failures in November over October brings about a similar feel- ing in the coal industry and indicates that we are rapidly becoming a nation of optimists.

Which reminds us of the optimistic Kentucky editor who, when asked his profession, was that was because the saved every time the other had to write down the other had. He was a "checking even."

Will They Suffer Carlisle's Fate?

Among the reasons advanced for the failure of banks to secure the money for a local business market was that when banks were hailed for loans ten years ago the threats they made against the banks had ac- complished the bankers' complaints that it was determined to send no more money to a Carlisle banker.

In view of the somewhat boomerang conduct of the gentlemen who closed the banks in Lexington last week and the shooting of other bankers be- fore, one wonders if buyers will be withdrawn from those offending markets next season.

Sometimes They Are Dumb.

The Federal government is now re- ceiving three times as much from taxes on cigarettes as the grower re- ceives for the best contents of Ty- ler county. And Mr. Hoover and Mr. Hoover propose boosting the tax on tobacco one-sixth.

Mr. Mellon is rich, wise, supposed to be the "greatest Secretary of the Treasury since—" and Herbert Hoover, as everyone will remember, is, or has a "wonder man." And yet, the simplest observer of conditions would hesitate to recommend a tax on a farm product that is now scarcely paying the cost of production in open market.

Great business minds can sometimes function dumbly.

Advertising Needed Now.

If ever a man with something to sell needed the stimulus of advertising to move his wares it is now. The public is a wary buyer during these times of stress and unless an appeal is made to their sense of a bargain to be had, there will be no buying.

Though it may take courage to spend money for advertising, that is the wise merchant is showing that courage and reaping the benefits.

The appointment of General H. H. Denhardt as Adjutant General is the cause of favorable comment by many Kentucky editors. That the National Guard needs a house-cleaning has been evident for some time and the selection of General Denhardt, the Governor has made a wise choice for this work.

PARDONING POWER ABUSED

(Shelby News)

The administration of Governor Sampson was no improvement over that of Governor Fields in the flagrant abuse of the pardoning power vested in the Chief Executive. In fact, its numbers of criminals turned out of the penitentiaries to again prey upon the public Sampson far exceeded the record made by Fields.

The entire State was aroused over the Fields pardoning parties during the closing month of his administra- tion, but Sampson opened every day with 30 prisoners on Monday, his last Fri- day in the penitentiary chain raised to 179 set free the day before Thanks- giving brought Sampson's total over the five hundred mark during the last three years.

While the record was the same in the end, one can see that there was a more reason for Fields than for Sampson when consideration is given to the standing policies of the two Executives in their abuse of the pardoning prerogative that the law, be immediately changed to take from the Governor the right to name sub-district trustees, county teacher exami- ners, etc., and that county boards of education be elected from the county at large and not from the districts shows that Mr. Richmond is keenly alive to the faults of the present system and has thought out con- structive remedies.

This writer, knowing Mr. Richmond personally, predicts that his regime will mean an epoch of advancement and accomplishment in the State De- partment of Education. Kentuckians could not have selected a better man.

YOUTHFUL NOTABLES

(Union County Advocate)

Farmers Minister Gandhi, who made such a favorable impression during his stay in the United States, is a leading figure in forty for several years, although he is now only 61. His youthful ability has been the subject of much comment, and he is recalled possibly as a boy who ob- tained a great fame at an early age, a few of which may be recalled:

Alexander the Great mastered virtually the entire known world before his death at the age of 32.

Napoleon Bonaparte became minister of England at 24.

Voltaire, Francis Xavier finished his historical work "The Hist. Roman Empire," at the age of 24.

Hudson Taylor, Modern Pioneer, at 24.

Mathematician Pascal, at 16.

Dante, at 25.

Keats died at 25, Shelley at 30, and Byron at 36.

Mozart was only 24 when he com- pleted the law of gravitation.

Newton was only 24 when he com- pleted the law of gravitation.

Herbert Spencer, at 24 began to work on his writings before he was 30.

Thomas Aquinas, at 25 was lecturing in Paris.

Milton had not yet done anything of importance at 25.

Bacon, at 25 had not done much.

Locke, at 25 had not done much.

Hume showed no signs of those quality called genius, when at 25.

Berkeley, philosophy was only fairly developed at 25.

A BITTER DOSE

(Louisville Herald)

The Democratic party will have a Secretary of the Treasury to re- commend to Congress the increase of taxation to raise revenue to meet the deficits created by the Pres- ident Hoover's policies, with the country had thought forever buried.

It is impossible to escape the fact that the President insists that such taxa- tion can be secured from those who can best afford to pay it, and that double economies, which are anything but drastic economies. Even smaller a million or two is asked for by $600,000,000 Farm Board and its wheat.

And no human being knows how many millions and millions would be shoveled out of the Treasury to fi- nance the grain gamblers. Mr. Hoover recommends to cure what he calls the "paralysis of credit."

The remedy for the deficit disease is truly a bitter dose. It remains to be seen whether some more palatable nostrum can be found.

(With feeling)

Little book roll, we did part,
Long I hunted you to my heart
All the year I clung to you—
I was falsified—you were true!
Little book roll, in a day,
You died I did start away,
To a good vacation spot—
I've come back, but you did not.

THAT WAS EASY

And then there was the sweet young thing, taking the examination for a driver's license, who was asked "If your brakes suddenly failed to work while you were going downhill, what would you do?"

She hesitated only a moment, then smiled brightly and answered: "Why that's easy. I'd just jump out and put a big stone under the wheel."

Adult Education Saves Men And Money

(Dr. Frank L. McVey, President, University of Kentucky, Lexington Herald)

In the period of depression we find ourselves looking about for ways and means to save money and energy and state, for the moment, as much as possible. We are willing to do some what low the economies and curtailments that are being made in the expenditures for education. We have even gone so far as to consider the possibility of "curtailing in the cause of our children." We have even come to consider the "paralysis of credit."

The remedy for the deficit disease is truly a bitter dose. It remains to be seen whether some more palatable nostrum can be found.

THE FOOL TRAVELER

I came to a roadside dwelling,
With great cares low and wide,
And they bade me rest and tarry
And they bade me step inside.

Welcome and cheer they gave me,—
Were comrades, lover and friend,
And bade me war for supper,
But I could not stay so long.

Nothing I brought to the Inn
But the garb of ruddy sun-tan,
Suited for pleasure or weal,
Befitting a roving man.

Nothing I brought to the Inn
But the traveler's cloak I wore;
And that, when I came away,
I needs must drop by the door.

How many FRIENDS have You...

There are so many attractive sections of the city in which to live, that one's friends are sure to be scattered, and of course many friends and relatives live in distant cities. Keeping these friendships alive, however, is easy with a telephone in the home.

Whether it's just a social conversation with a neighbor in the next block, or a voice visit using the quick and in- expensive long distance telephone service, telling that you are important.

With all the countless ways in which it serves through the routine of daily life, and with its presence on assurance of help in emergencies, modern telephone service is so low in cost that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

RAILROAD TRAINS on the HIGHWAY

CAN YOU IMAGINE SUCH A CONDITION?

A fast freight or passenger train comes thundering down the highway and it is all you can do to swerve your car out of its path.

With a wreck in it a year, leaving you with blame perhaps toward railroads and a government which permits such things.

A ridiculous picture? Yes,—and impossible, because railroad trains, unlike trucks and buses, must have rails to run on and so army of workers to keep them in good condition, and railroads must pay all the maintenance costs of their roadways.

Yet these other means of transportation use the highways for commercial purposes and YOU—asking with the railroads—help support them by paying taxes for the maintenance of public highways.

The railroads are public carriers and operate with every con- sideration for your comfort and safety, but they are also business enterprises and are entitled to earn a fair profit for those who own them. You are probably one of the owners, at least indirectly, because railroad securities are held by insurance companies, busi- ness and charitable institutions and very often form the nucleus of trust funds.

The railroads are not earning a reasonable profit. The low permits them to pay a "living wage" to the men of their property, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has fixed this at 5½%. The actual rate of return of class one railroads for the first nine months of 1931 was 2.06%.

The number of passengers carried in 1930 was less than in 1920, although the population of the United States has increased 10%. The present volume of freight traffic is approximately the same as it was fifteen years ago.

The railroads are struggling with an economic condition that may prove ruinous to them and to those institutions whose interests are bound up in their welfare.

What can be done to relieve this situation? Legislative meanness must be passed that will deal fairly with the railroads. They are the backbone of the Nation's transportation sys- tem and must be brought from unfair taxation and regulation, back to a sound financial basis. You can cooperate by helping them procure legislative relief. A quicker help is to stop by train and travel on the steam railroads.

Reciting that the sign "We Always Cook With Butter" is sometimes seen in restaurants in the larger cities, Dr. McCormack said, "The housewives of Kentucky do not have to be told how to cook, but in some families the but- ter supply is not infrequently curtail- ed on the plea of economy. Butter should never be considered just a fat to be spread for bread. It is a dis- tinctive food of unusual value, for which there is no adequate substi- tute. It is all food, no waste, and is easily and quickly digested. No other food fat acceptable to the palate is so rich in Vitamin A as butter-fat. This vitamin promotes growth and helps to build up resistance against colds.

"Demand good quality butter. Re- fuse to buy the latter and flavored product. Good butter has a sweet nutty flavor, is smooth, even grained body and a uniform color. It should be wrapped in fresh paper and kept in a cool sanitary place. The butter at every meal."

Young Children Need A Variety Of Foods

Begin early to give the child a care- fully chosen variety of foods at regu- lar mealtimes, advise child specialists of the Bureau of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agricul- ture, and he will gradually form habits of eating that will contribute to his nutrition throughout life. There are no foods that he must learn to like and need not be any later if food experi- ences have been right.

Introduce strange foods tactfully, one at a time, and serve small por- tions until the flavor becomes famil- iar, the specialists recommend. The Bureau of Home Economics
