Are you one of the 70 who made the pledge to the Johnson Memorial Hospital and have not made your second payment? Look on your check book stub, at once, and save them the trouble of hunting you up. It takes money to run it and our hospital is here to stay, and a necessity to our community. So—do your best to help us. Do you know that the third payment will be due on May first, 1931 and some thirty who signed that promissory note, have not paid the first year pledge, yet.

IF I FORGET THEE

In a long valley of the hemlock ranges
Ere yet they open to the winding water,
Beyond a street of elms and home-steads
I remember

The clover hillows and the bending barley—
The sugar-bush beyond the upland pasture—
The snowy birches blown and waving
In the west wind!

Hedged with old towering locusts stood the dwelling
Oh, sweet, through starry windows, in the June night,
Floated, falling—

Post-quare, unpainted, with its one vast chimney
Cheering the whole, the house in low walls lifted.
The garden-viewing log veranda
Gave on the sunset.
—Ila W. Cleghorn, in "Portraits and Fly Leaves."

OPPORTUNITY MOOS BUT ONCE

Mr. Gordon came into the house in a state of great alarm.

"Tommas, Tommas," she exclaimed "de e's a cow in the garden!"

"I nsa stand here wastin' valuable time," replied Tamman, "get back and mill it before it gets out."

HINTS TO FARMERS

Cows will eat an unpalatable grain mixture or low-grade hay more readily if flavored with molasses. Before adding the molasses, mix it with enough water to make it flow freely. Excessive quantities of molasses make the ration too laxative. Don't give more than 3 pounds a day to each cow.

Cold-storage eggs may be used quite satisfactorily as fresh eggs for most cooking purposes in the household. Where economy must be practiced, the tendency is to use fewer fresh eggs during the winter months, because of the advance in price. The less expensive cold-storage eggs help to keep up the supply of this necessary food.

Daffodils can be grown singly in a vase of water. When putting the bulbs away to root, the water in the vase should barely touch the base of the bulb, or rot may set in. If the bulb fits tightly in the neck of the vase, rooting will occur readily even if there is a space between its base and the water. Change the water once a week. It is advisable to keep a lump or two of charcoal in the vase.

Select female breeders from the poultry flock that conform to the standard qualifications for their breed and variety, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Don't pick out birds that show disqualifications such as side spurs in single-comb varieties, stubs in clean-legged breeds and "foreign" color markings. Choose females that have bright, full eyes, combs and wattles of good texture, wide backs, and fairly deep bodies, and that are well fleshed.

Feed grese both grain and roughage in winter, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture, but take care not to overfeed the breeders. Oats are a desirable grain for breeding geese. A limited amount of corn, wheat, and barley may be added for variety. The greater part of the feed should be of roughage such as vegetables, clover, or alfalfa hay, chopped corn stover, or silage. Silage is a good feed for geese if it does not contain too much corn and is free from mold.

The winter ration for the dairy cow should include at least one kind of hay preferably a legume, one succulent feed, and grain. Give the cow all the hay she will eat twice a day. If she will eat corn stover or straw in addition, let her have it. The amount of silage to feed depends on the size of the cow and the quantity of other roughage. About 3 pounds a day to each 100 pounds live weight is the average amount. Dried beet pulp soaked in water three times its weight of water is desirable if no other succulent feed is available.

Some choice varieties of evergreens which do not come true from seed may easily be propagated in greenhouses during the winter. Among these are varieties of arbor vitae, hemlock, juniper, retinospora, yew, and others. The wood for the cuttings is usually in good condition after a few light frosts have checked the growth and it has ripened. Cuttings may be made at any time up to midwinter with good results. Do not cut or handle the wood while it is frozen. The vigorous branches on the sides and near the tops of the trees furnish the best wood for cuttings.

A shallow flat glass or earthenware baking dish with partitions is a great convenience for warming up small portions of different leftover vegetables. Grease the place with butter or other fat, and put each kind of vegetable in a compartment by itself. Use a white sauce on one, buttered crumbs on another, and grated cheese, butter, salt, and pepper on a third. A little cream to moisten one of the vegetables may be used if you have no white sauce on hand. Put the dish in the oven long enough to heat thoroughly, and serve. Some members of the family will ask for one vegetable, and some for another, so not all will be used, and all will be delicious.

Farm land that has been terraced with special care the first year until the love soil becomes thoroughly settled. Notice weak places after heavy rains and repair any breaks immediately. It is less, not to cultivate terraces the first year but to seed them to some cover crop. Rye and vetch makes the best winter cover crop. For summer crops, plant soy-beans, cowpeas, or velvet bean. Run steep slopes to run the rows parallel with the terraces, with one row on the terrace. Terraces that are cultivated should be plowed at least once a year and the soil thrown toward the ridge. Do not cultivate steep land that wastes badly between the terraces; build up the terraces and seed the entire field to grain for pasture or meadow.

Treatment of flower seeds with mercuric chloride in a 1-1000 solution will destroy many seedborne parasites and so help to prevent the common diseases of garden flowers, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Most flower seeds will stand soaking in this solution for one half hour without injury. Rinse after the solution containing the seeds frequently to keep air bubbles from preventing contact between the solution and the seeds. Dissolve the seeds in clean water after treatment. Use only wooden, glass or earthenware vessels for the mercuric chloride solution. The seed should be planted immediately after treatment or it may begin to swell. If prompt planting is not possible, the seed should be spread out thin at once and dried thoroughly.

Johnnie—Well, it keeps cows from falling apart.

PROOF OF "KICK" REQUIRED

(Stanford Interior Journal)

According to a decision of the Court of Appeals last week, it is going to be necessary hereafter to prove that "home brew" seized in raids under state laws is intoxicating, the mere fact that it is on a householders' premises, or even ownership acknowledged by him, not being sufficient to convict him unless accompanied by proof that it is actually intoxicating.

This decision, we imagine, will eliminate some prosecuting officers hereafter to have samples of such liquors analyzed for proof of alcoholic content. If that content shows up more than one-half of one per cent, then under the state and federal laws the home brew is intoxicating, legally, whether it is in fact or not, just as a man who has been absent for seven years, without anybody having any evidence of his existence in that time, may be declared legally dead, though he may be in actual fact alive still.

In the case before the Court of Appeals, while there is little, if any doubt in the minds of officers of the guilt of the accused, no proof was offered in his trial that the home brew was intoxicating, and so the Court of Appeals reversed his conviction.

COOK ROASTS SLOWLY TO PREVENT SHRINKAGE

When a housewife cooks a rib roast of beef or a leg of lamb she must consider how much loss there is likely to be from shrinkage. Naturally she wants the meat to "go as far" as possible. Deptlimis in schools, hospitals, and other institutions have the same problem on a larger scale; they must be able to estimate both the number of servings and also the nutritive value of each serving. Strinkage of meat during cooking means a dollars and cents loss to the manager of a restaurant, cafeteria, or hotel dining room, or as a deliraessen where cooked meat is sold. The shrinkage affects the appearance, palatability, nutritive value, and the quantity of meat available for serving. In the last four years the Bureau of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has been accumulating meat-shrinkage data in connection with the nation-wide cooperative study of the factors that influence the palatability of meat. There seems to be a close relation between shrinkage and oven temperature; that is, when meat is roasted from start to finish in a very hot oven the shrinkage is greater than when the meat is first seared in a high temperature and then finished slowly with the temperature rapidly reduced. For example, if, after both ribs have been seared in a hot oven, the temperature is rapidly reduced so as to finish the cooking very slowly, the shrinkage of the meat when roast is only about one-eighth of the fresh weight, whereas if the roasting goes on to the end in a hot oven the shrinkage is about one-fourth of the fresh weight.

Well-done beef shrinks more than rare beef, other things being equal. Well-finished, high-grade beef and lamb roasts lose less fat and more water during cooking than very thin meat of the same kind and cut.

"Spinner" Campbell Assistant Coach At U. Of K.

John "Spinner" Campbell, star halfback of the University of Alabama football team, which won the Southern Conference championship and conquered the Pacific Coast champions, Washington State, in the Tournament of Roses game, was appointed backfield coach of the University of Kentucky Wildcats at a meeting of the athletic council Monday afternoon. Campbell, who graduates in June, will not help head coach Harry Gamage in spring practice, which starts February 4, but will report at Lexington about September 1.

G. C. MYERS ANNOUNCES FOR REPRESENTATIVE

(Mt. Olivet Tribune Democrat)

The race for Representative in the Nicholas-Robertson Legislative District has opened, Mr. G. C. Myers of Nicholas being the first aspirant to formally announce his candidacy for the Democratic nomination at the August Primary.

Mr. Myers is one of the leading, progressive and substantial citizens of Nicholas county, and possesses every qualification to make the people a first-class Representative. He is the owner of a farm and is specially interested in the needs of the farmer.

He is perfectly cognizant of the heavy burden which the farmer is now resting, and it will be his chief aim if elected to bring about a reduction of taxation. And this is certainly needed. Taxes have doubled, trebled within the past 50 years. Thousands of farms today are assessed at a higher rate than they would sell for at public outcry at the courthouse door. Mr. Myers knows the needs of the people, and as Representative it would be his aim to safeguard their interests. He has been successful in every branch of business in which he has been engaged, and his record as a citizen is clear. Politically, he is a Democrat of the old school and never shirks a duty. He is a man the people can safely trust.

WHAT Lies Ahead for Us?

A matter of vital import to every member of this --and all neighborhoods

Has Fear Gripped You?

Have You Listened Too Well To The Calamity Howlers?

Most of us are "financially afraid;" most of us have given ear to dire predictions. That is why we may all read with profit an editorial of the New York World, printed below:

"THE PUBLIC ENEMY TODAY"

(An Editorial from the New York Evening World)

There are far too many people, from business men to laborers, who are giving a too eager ear to wild rumors and spiteful gossip tending to destroy confidence and create an atmosphere of general distrust.

The victims of vague fear, on the street and in the market place, are a menace to the community.

These are the defeatists that hold back the return of that prosperity that cannot but come from the limitless resources of the nation.

They are the terrorists that drive the dollar into hiding when it ought to be at work making jobs for the unemployed.

They are the scarecrows of imaginary disasters, the spreaders of rumors having no basis in reality—the carriers of lies.

They are the feeders of that mob psychology which creates the spirit of panic.

They blind the thoughtless to the very evident soundness of our great business enterprises.

It is the pessimists among business men, who lack the red blood of courage, and who are mentally sick with vain imaginings who are responsible for the gloom among the less informed.

The most serious threat to our country today is in the business man of little faith, whose fears are played upon by the most silly gossip which poisons the air with absurd rumors and mean and malicious lies.

Our Interest In The Welfare Of This Community Prompts Us To Sponsor This Message To The People Of Carlisle And Vicinity.
