MANY BOYS WANT TO COME TO CAMP

Another boy who had been at Camp Black Hawk wrote: "The Portland Circle told me I was too old to come to Camp Black Hawk. I turned in my name and they want to send me to Camp Carnes. Please write and tell them to let me come one more year. I'm another writer. Paul Sapp asked that two own boys be allowed to come again this year.

All through the year Mr. Sapp receives letters from the boys who have been at camp. Mr. Sapp has paid several visits to Louisville, and when social workers have visited the home of practically every boy who has been at Camp Black Hawk. His home has stood in Louisville and upon the occasion of his last visit he was met at the train by a delegation of fifty or more boys and given a reception that would have honored a king.

The Mercury again appeals to the citizens of Nicholas county to aid Mr. Sapp in the great work he is doing at Camp Black Hawk. In addition to giving these underprivileged boys from Louisville two weeks of sunshine and happiness, he spends three months each summer caring for the boys of Carlisle and Nicholas county.

Mr. Sapp will need a lot of food to feed the twenty boys during the two weeks from July 13 to July 25, and is depending upon the good citizens of the county to furnish the necessities of any kind, meat, lard, preserves, canned fruit or money will be acceptable. The contributions may be left at Metcalfe's grocery or taken to camp.

HINTS TO FARMERS

It was once thought desirable to keep a storage room for eggs so dry that a piece of wood would found forming on the shell, but recent investigations show that a fairly high humidity is desirable. If too humid, the eggs will decay or air absorb moisture from the eggs, resulting in enlarged air cells and deterioration.

Fine flowers make an lavish a show in a small an effect in growing them as plants planted in the border, irises should be spaced so they can develop and attain sufficient enough to carry a to be stalks of blooms. Do not set plants according them grow over them after they flowering season. Beside over the plantings prevents the proper ripening of the plant and so exhausts the bloom the next year. The plants made for the next season are formed in the summer so early autumn and it is best to divide and transplant either before or after this time.

Defective chimneys are one of the most frequent causes of fires in dwellings. All chimneys should be built with sound, thick walls and preferably lined with fire-clay flue lining. Woodwork should not be built into or in direct contact with chimney masonry. Chimneys disintegrate most quickly at the top owing to the action of the weather and hot gases. Wide cracks may occur or mortar joints open up through which sparks can pass. Smoke are particularly dangerous if the cracks are below the roof. Cracks and other faults should be found and cement mortar. If the chimney is badly cracked or if the bricks are eaten away, tear down the brick work to solid construction and rebuild it with hard-burned brick laid in cement mortar. Cracks may be bridged in a chimney by building a course line in the flue, supported by poise and covering the chimney with a wash or wet sack so as to confine the smoke to filter through defective brick work.

THE VERDICT

W.N.U. SERVICE (Tennessee)

TO BERTRAM DARAND, M. D., nothing was surprising today. So very much had happened to him since that epochal night six months ago when Kitty Hewitt first appeared at his door and he had come to a condition in which he could accept, calmly, almost any unexpected event. That is why he found himself facing, without astonishment, the prodigious phenomenon that he was in demand, professionally, that almost overnight he had gained a practice.

Now that his name and his picture were appearing in nearly every edition of the newspapers, people everywhere were discussing him, and at first their talk of him had been unfavorable, now, by one of those whims of fate, his notoriety was turning him into a hero of sorts.

The call of James Bradner was a marked exception and Doctor Darand was forewarned of this by the note the statesman had written and sent with the summons over the office phone. He very promptly got rid of the gangster sufferer from lumbago, who just then was exclaiming, "Oh, doctor, it must be so exciting to actually see a shooting!"

When the door opened again, a man entered—a middle-aged man, with deliberate, confident bearing and quick, keen, incisive eyes.

"We will not waste time," the caller said at once. "I gave the name Bradner on the list of persons at the waiting-room. I am Rhodaine, of course."

"Of course," said Bertram, his pulse quickening. Rhodaine was a figure in lawyer—the best criminal lawyer in Chicago, people said. Some said he was the best in the world, in the country.

"I have been retained," Rhodaine continued, "to defend Pellen."

"Yes," said Bertram.

To think of Rhodaine, was also to think of a lawyer, Pellen. This was Bertram's first case in court since he had been L. & N. Railroad, and on the East by the lot of Elizabeth Campbell, this being the same property conveyed to Hinda Ache Sears by W. H. Beach on the 26th day of May, 1920, recorded in Deed Book 41, page 5, Nicholas County Court Clerk's office.

Said sale will be made upon credits of 6, 12 and 18 months, the purchaser may pay cash at his option. If the purchaser does not elect to pay cash he will be required to execute bond for the deferred payments of the purchase price, with good surety thereon, approved by the Commissioner in 6, 12 and 18 months respectively, from date of sale, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, and said bonds to remain a lien upon the property sold until fully paid. The purchaser may pay said bonds at any time before maturity together with interest thereon to the date of payment.

The purchaser of said property will be required to assume and pay all taxes assessed against the same for the year 1931.

Said property will be sold for the purpose of satisfying certain judgments existing against the estate of A. M. Wright, deceased, amounting in the sum of $1,000.00 and all the costs of division.

Pellen and Kitty Hewitt at a table in a corner of the cafe."

"What did you do?"

"I sat down with the other three at a table about twenty feet from Pellen's and Miss Hewitt's. We ordered drinks and danced a little and watched them."

"And then Pellen and Hewitt; what did they do?"

"They sat quietly at their table and talked."

"Then why did you keep on watching them?"

"Pellen and the girls expected trouble; that was why they were there. Pellen, you know, was a gunman or had run with gunmen, Kitty Hewitt was trying to get away, and the girls were doing their best to help please her which his old pals considered as protecting them. They'd marked him."

"Did you hear that?"

"Kitty had told me before."

"Then Pellen and Miss Fisher and Keller left you the same?"

"Not in so many words; but it was clear they expected some one who was going to leave Pellen trouble."

"Then did you warn Pellen of that?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"It was perfectly clear that he was on the lookout for trouble. He was keeping watch all around."

"Then you saw the expected trouble from the police—from Furgrister, for instance?"

"No. The trouble came from another gunman, when Gerve Lavry and another man and two girls with them, came in."

"What did you know about Lavry?"

"I knew he was a bad character, a gunman and a dope fiend; and it was clear that every one else in the place thought he was going to make trouble for Pellen."

"What did you actually see Lavry do?"

"I saw him sniff powder from his hand, which I believe was 'snow'—cocaine—several times. He watched Pellen steadily; and at last, after midnight, Pellen rose for his check and prepared to leave. Then Lavry got up and went to Pellen's table."

"What did you do?"

"I watched."

"Then what did you see Lavry do?"

"I saw him stop at Pellen's and Kitty Hewitt's table and speak to them."

"I saw Lavry reach for Miss Hewitt and try to grab her."

"No, sir."

"Pellen got up."

"Lavry did not draw his pistol," Rhodane put it emphatically.

"No, sir," Bertram answered Bertram.

"But Lavry did."

"No," denied Bertram. "I did not see that."

"Then did you see?"

"I saw Pellen lunge forward, and Kitty Hewitt struggle with his arm."

"So. So he could not have drawn his pistol," Rhodane said.

"Not at that moment, no. But at the next second Lavry fell dead. Pellen and Lavry were shooting at each other."

"Surely you saw that!"

"No, because I didn't—but till Lavry was down."

"But you must have seen it, doctor."

"I tell you I didn't. I was watching Kitty Hewitt. She'd been flung to the floor and the shooting was over in a second. There was Lavry down, dead; there was—"

"Then the lawyer stopped him, impressively, "we have now come to the second 'knock' in the evidence upon which depends a man's life or death and a girl's honor or danger. You are in love with the girl. Surely you feel the importance of getting at the true matter."

Bertram caught his breath deeply. "I do, Mr. Rhodaine."

"You were at a table with Fisher-Chelsea Officer Furgrister and two girls who were interested with him in Pellen and Kitty Hewitt. They have testified before the jury which indicted Pellen for murder, that Pellen drew his revolver first and fired first and killed Lavry."

"Pellen's only chance to escape a death sentence is to have every jury-man's only chance to escape conviction of complicity with him—to prove that Lavry actually drew his pistol first but that he shot in self-defense.

"The testimony of all other witnesses is directed against that. They swear he drew before Lavry made a motion toward his pistol. Miss Sands, Dr. Darand, and consider your position and tell me what you have to say."

Young Doctor Darand gasped as he stared at the lawyer and considered his answer. Finally, he said:

"My testimony, Mr. Rhodane, is that it is impossible that Pellen fired first. I am a medical man; I was present. Immediately after the shots were fired, I examined Lavry. Pellen fired but one shot; it killed Lavry instantly. Lavry fired two shots; all of his bullets went wild. It is impossible that Lavry pulled the trigger before Pellen; both he and Miss Sands should have heard the second report. If the chimney is badly cracked or if the bricks are eaten away, tear down the brick work to solid construction and rebuild it with hard-burned brick laid in cement mortar. Cracks may be bridged in a chimney by building a course line in the flue, supported by poise and covering the chimney with a wash or wet sack so as to confine the smoke to filter through defective brick work.
