College Advocates Light Cultivation Of Land

Cultivation of crops to a depth beyond three or four inches is wasteful of effort, if not actually harmful, says the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Tests indicate that cultivation to a depth of three or four inches, principally for the purpose of destroying weeds and conserving moisture, is better than deeper cultivation.

The destruction of weeds is cited by the college as the most important reason for cultivating corn. The tests did not indicate that more cultivation than is necessary to keep weeds down is beneficial. If weeds have gotten large, deeper cultivation may be necessary to destroy them, but it is better to cultivate when they are small.

Other reasons for cultivation may include the conservation of moisture, especially when corn is small the aeration of the soil, and keeping the surface soil loose to facilitate the intake of water.

Cultivation should never be close enough to disturb the roots. The first cultivation of corn may be deep and close to the plants, but later workings should be shallow and preferably done with a cultivator which has many small teeth or shovels.

The number of cultivations will depend upon the kind of soil and the weather and the appearance of weeds.

Tests made for four years indicated that such cultivations of potatoes, which many persons cultivate deeper, gave better crops than nine deep workings.

THE GARDEN

TIMELY TOPICS

By John B. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture

Now is the time to make one of the regular bi-monthly plantings of beans. Excellent is to make this planting and those up to August 1 double the quantity length so as to assure a supply to be canned. Either of the varieties Stringless Green Pod or Full Measure may be used.

This is the time, too, to watch the older leaves on the tomatoes, for the first signs of leaf spot and leaf mold. Unless checked, these diseases cause the drooping of the leaves, and this reduces the yield and shortens the life of the plant. The way to hold leaf spot and leaf mold in check is to apply bordeaux mixture. Three applications, the first now, and the others two weeks apart, will pay.

The Mexican bean beetle has been slow in appearing in many parts of Kentucky. Even so, it will not be too sanguine about it, but to be prepared to dust or spray when the first egg clusters are found.

Many gardeners will shortly notice the beginning of the leaves of their salsify blackening and dropping off. To check this trouble bordeaux mixture should be applied. A second application, made two weeks later will furnish protection through the rest of the season. Still, concerning salsify, close and deep working of the soil is not advised, for it may result in branched roots. Such weeds that occur in the rows should be removed by hand.

On the day the last cutting of asparagus is made the planting should be fertilized. Best to use in manure, but if manure is not obtainable a fertilizer whose analysis is 8-6-6 may be used instead. Since this analysis is difficult to procure, a quicker day mix his own. To make 100 pounds of this mixture, are needed: 36 pounds of nitrate of soda, 25 pounds of 16 percent superphosphate and 16 pounds of muriate of potash.

The rate of application is one pound to 20 square feet. Broadcast and worked in.

The safe length of time to continue cutting of asparagus is 6 weeks for beds 3 years or over; 3 weeks for beds from 3 to 5 years. No cutting should be done until in the third year, after the bed is set.

THE MAYOR WILL RUN

(Union County Advocate)

Louisville newspapers announced Sunday that Mayor William B. Harrison will run for governor on the Republican ticket if his party in convention July 1, will adopt a platform suitable to the Mayor's ideals of politics. He has declared that the Republican nominee if he can muster a sufficient number of votes at the state convention, the personnel of the ticket and the contents of the platform to the contrary.

Despite his plea for something different from the usual party platform Mayor Harrison is an ardent Republican and in sympathy with the policies of his party both in the State and Nation. His apparent aloofness from the influence of party bosses, as expressed in his public statement, is over-shadowed by his announcement that "I am convinced that the Republican party offers the only opportunity for a constructive program in Kentucky." That statement puts the Louisville mayor in the same category with all other Republican leaders. Herbert Hoover expressed the same thought in regard to the nation during the 1928 campaign. Flem Sampson talked on the same subject in 1927, and all other prominent Republicans have broadcasted the theory far and wide.

In his letter made public Sunday the Mayor failed to outline any plans for a "constructive program for Kentucky." We suppose those definite plans will be formulated at Lexington under the watchful eyes of the Republican bosses who will run the July convention just as they have done in all other Republican conventions. Any more than likely the platform as established at Lexington will be just what the Mayor referred to in his letter of Sunday as "a brief, concise and unequivocal program for the betterment of the State and the management of its affairs."

We doubt if Mayor Harrison will experience much difficulty in securing the Republican nomination, because the last year aspirants for that honor at the hands of the Republican party are few and far between. The Mayor may have announced that he would run just to prove that he was really an honest-to-goodness dyed-in-the-wool, hide-bound Republican. We can imagine the many expressions of party loyalty than the Mayor's statement that he would run in a year when the defeat of the Republican nominee is all but conceded, even this early in the game.

A report of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington shows that approximately 1,200,000,000 pieces of paper money are produced each year. For this purpose 1,125 tons of paper manufactured to contain red and blue silk fabrics in every sheet, and 1,100 tons of specially prepared ink, are required. There are 240 presses in daily operation and every five seconds one printing press turns out five notes.

Why Vaccination Against Smallpox Is Necessary

Smallpox is a horrible, contagious disease which leaves its victim terribly scarred for life. If he does not die. It has been proven that smallpox vaccination, which leaves only one scar, will keep the person from having smallpox. The vaccination causes very little, if any, discomfort, if properly taken care of. In some cases the vaccination has not been kept clean and has become infected, causing an excessively sore arm, but the soreness was not due to vaccination alone. Because people have become careless and have not protected themselves from the small dread disease by vaccination—the only possible protection—lately, more people have been having smallpox each year. Smallpox is very contagious, and one never knows when he or his children will come in contact with it. Because a child can be protected and need not have smallpox, and because if he gets it he is a danger to every one around him, vaccination against smallpox is necessary to be a Kentucky Blue Ribbon Child. If your child does not have a satisfactory vaccination scar, have him vaccinated at once. It may save his life or save him from a lifetime of humiliation because of a face covered with scars. Vaccination protects the body from smallpox for seven years after it is done. If your child has not been vaccinated for seven years or more he should have a new vaccination. If he does not have a scar with tiny "pits" in it, the vaccination did not "take," and it should be done over.

15,000 Purebred Sires On State Farms In 10 Years

Fifteen thousand purebred sires have been placed on Kentucky farms in the last 10 years, through the efforts of county agents and the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, according to a summary of the work made by Wayland Rinehi, field agent in animal husbandry. This includes 4,616 purebred beef and dairy bulls, 2,311 purebred boars and 6,286 rams. In 1920 less than 20 percent of the bulls in use in Kentucky were of pure breeding. Now more than 70 percent of those in use in the state are purebred, and some counties have succeeded in eliminating all grade and scrub bulls.

Kentucky was the 45th state to enter the national contest to replace grade sires with purebreds, but after five years it ranked first in total number of breeders enrolled. In 1927, Union county announced that the last grade and scrub bull had been driven across its borders. On May 7, 1926, the United States department of agriculture officially recognized Union county as the first county in the United States to have 100 percent purebred bulls.

Russell county farmers succeeded in replacing all grade and scrub bulls with purebreds in 1927, being the second county in Kentucky and the third in the United States to accomplish his feat. Taylor county was the third county in Kentucky and the fourth county in the United States to reach a similar position. There are 120 counties in the state in which more than 100 farmers have agreed to use purebred sires only.

No Substitute For Milk; Food For All

Milk is the one food which does not have a substitute and should be included in the daily diet of everyone, declare nutrition specialists at the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. It is the best source of calcium, which is essential for the development and hardening of bones and teeth. In fact, it is difficult for the mother to supply sufficient calcium in the diet of her children unless a generous supply of milk is used daily.

Milk is also a good source of protein or muscle building material. One quart of milk daily will furnish from one-half to two-thirds the amount of protein needed by the growing child.

The butterfat of milk is an excellent source of vitamin A, which has been found to be necessary for the normal growth of children and health of both children and adults.

Recent studies have shown that milk is a good protective food against pellagra.

Every growing boy and girl should use four cups of milk daily and every adult two cups. If an individual does not want to drink milk, it may be used in the preparation of other foods, such as vegetable soups, creamed vegetables or meats, pudding and other desserts.
