MARCH MAGIC

Once more the fickle birds return
From the sleeping south,
And strew the tender fields again
With their old melodies.

The sky is magic as the month,
The sea feels fever for a while,
The icy winds have washed it clear;
But it is the drama of green.

The boats are breathing on the sea;
They cannot wait for men;
Some underride has brought them west.

Straight from a blue-starred fen.

Unpolished they steal away,
No man shall see them soon,
Till the sea feels fever for a while,
Then leave them to the moon.

We, too, shall steal upon the spring
Before the dawn-brown wider;
Shall drop, some day, behind the moon,
Been a star-blue tide.

Enchanted poets we, too, shall touch
Cadiz or Cameron;
Our pilot point besides
A magic wisp of moon.
