

Dean Cooper Urges Farmers To Produce More For Home

A plea for greater production of farm products for home use is made by a statement issued by Dean Thomas P. Cooper of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

The production of more food crops this year indicates that there is a real opportunity for expansion, except at cost of overproduction. There is no need of farm expansion, however, which may be expanded to the extent of the production of surplus for the farm.

"Certain vegetables, milk and other dairy products, and poultry products, honey and syrup should be produced in much greater quantities than the present, and surplus quantities should be stored for the winter months without getting the best part of the family food supply from the farm. This represents one of the most profitable enterprises in the production of a large number of farm products, and the surplus quantities should be stored for the winter months without getting the best part of the family food supply from the farm.
